Roy Durham Enroute From Genoa to Elgin Loses a Leg.

THOUGHT TRAIN DID NOT STOP

Roy Durham, Who Is Well Known Here, Had Brought Team Back to Genoa from Elgin Where Parents Had Moved.

Enroute to Elgin and believing that he was being carried by his station, Roy Durham, an eleven year old boy who is a grandson of H. S. Nutt of this place, jumped from the east bound Milwaukee train due in Elgin at 9:55 last Friday night as it slowed up on the highway in the rear of Stickling's mill and was thrown under the wheels. His left leg was cut off about three inches below the knee.

The accident aroused nearly every resident on the west side, the excitement being occasioned by the piercing screams from the boy, which continued for five minutes after it happened. They were of the heart rending kind. The ambulance was called immediately and the boy was removed to the Sherman hospital, where Dr. Clark, the road physician, cared for him. He passed a good night and the authorities at the hospital said Saturday morning that there was a good chance for his recovery. Dr. Clark said that the leg had been amputated below the knee in an effort to save the knee joint, but that another operation might be necessary.

Young Durham with his parents moved to Elgin last Thursday from here and was stopping with Edwin Nutt at No. 276 Prospect street. The boy had returned Friday with his uncle, driving one of the teams used in moving the family's household effects to Elgin. He had expected to return to Elgin on Saturday, but having made a good trip here on Friday, he decided to take the night train.

As the train pulled into Elgin it slowed up at the Stickling mill as is customary. The brakeman called "Elgin," and the boy made a rush for the door. With a trifle increase of speed the train started to pull into the depot. Unaccustomed to Elgin, the boy thought he was going to be carried by his destination and jumped. The speed of the train threw him under the wheels.

Immediately after the accident, Durham was taken into the undertaking establishment of Bunker & Chambers on west Chicago street. Dr. Rutledge, who was then performing an autopsy on the body of Joseph Muhre stopped the flow of blood, ordered the ambulance and notified Sherman hospital and Dr. Clark, the road physician.

REV. T. E. REAM, THE NEW PASTOR.

Rev. Ream does not come to Genoa as a stranger for on many occasions since his entering the conference, he has spoken from the pulpit of the Genoa M. E. church.

Rev. Ream comes as a friend and not as a stranger for it is recorded that Hampshire, our neighboring town, was the scene of his birth, and, at the age of eighteen, he was converted. In 1892, he became a member of the Rock River conference and took his first charge at South Elgin. In 1894, he was given the charge at Barrington, and his last charge was that of the Grace church of Rockford.

SUDDEN DEATH IN IOWA FULLER OPENS CAMPAIGN

George Hill, Formerly of This Place, Passes Away at Waterloo, Iowa.

WAS ILL ONLY SHORT TIME

Deceased Had Been Working in North Dakota and Was Returning Home.—Was a Member of M. W. of A.

Word was received here early Tuesday morning from the Mayor of Waterloo, Iowa, (T. J. Martin) by Mayor J. E. Stott stating that George Hill had passed away in the city hospital very suddenly of diphtheria.

The news was a shock to his many friends and relatives in Genoa, and preparations were at once made to bring the remains to Genoa and relatives of the deceased left on the morning train for that place.

Mr. Hill had been in the fields of Dakota with a threshing gang, and had just left his work a few days ago. J. E. Stott, G. E. Stott, Elias Hoag and Chas. Smith left Fargo, North Dakota, Sunday, and Mr. Hill was in company with them. At Waterloo, they became separated, and Hill was not heard from until the dispatch came Tuesday morning.

The deceased was last seen at the depot in Waterloo on the arrival of the party there. He complained of a sore throat and did not accompany the party in a sightseeing trip about the town. At train time Mr. Hill was not to be found, and a search was made before leaving Waterloo, which proved fruitless. Word was left with the city officials, and the party departed.

Besides a wife, two small children survive, all living in Genoa. Mr. Hill was a member of the Genoa camp of the Modern Woodmen and carried a policy for $2000.

The remains were buried in Waterloo.

JUDGE FULLER GIVES ADDRESS

A Delegation From Genoa Go to Sycamore Wednesday Night to Hear the Judge.—Genoa Has Best Representation.

With a speech that was worth going miles to hear, Judge Chas. E. Fuller of Belvidere opened the republican campaign.

The Judge is well liked in this vicinity as was proven by Genoa's large delegation.

The following is the speech in brief:

All wealth is created, or at least made available, by the labor of men. The soil and all it contains is the gift of the Almighty for the common benefit of mankind. To secure that benefit for mankind requires labor. No man ever acquired great wealth by the unaided labor of his own hands. No great wealth was ever acquired by any individual, or by any corporation except as they utilized and received the benefit of the labor of many men.

The great problem of the immediate future is to see that the man who tills the soil and feeds all mankind, the man who fells the forest to house mankind, the man who digs the coal to warm mankind and to produce the steam that carries the commerce of the world, the man who toils on the railroads and steamship lines, the man who toils in the factories and shops producing the machinery, the clothing and all the necessities and comforts of modern civilization, in fact the man who, in any avocation of life produces something for the benefit of civilized mankind,—I say the great problem is to see that these men, the natural sovereigns of the world shall receive their due and rightful share of the world's bounties produced or made available by their labor.

True, labor is better paid in this country than in any other nation under the shining sun. Under republican rule, labor is better paid than ever before; under republican administration of affairs slavery was abolished and all men made free and equal before the law.

Under republican administration labor can always find remunerative employment, and at steadily increasing wages and under constantly bettering conditions, while it was under democratic rule that slavery existed, and even since its abolition, whenever the democratic party has been in power, labor has suffered for lack of employment and has been compelled to accept lower wages.

The republican party is the friend of man, and under its beneficent rule the conditions of those who produce the world's wealth have always been bettered and I believe will continue to be bettered. The slogan of the republican party is "Honest money and the chance to earn it by honest toil," and, in the language of that great statesman and benefactor of the human race, William McKinley, "I believe it is better to open the mills of the country to the labor of America, than to open the mints of the country to the silver of the world."

"She was led astray." Yes, and she furnished the rope first,

The board of registration will meet next Tuesday at the office of K. Jackman & Son. Voters are requested to attend to this important matter and thus save trouble on election day.

BRADFORD IN TROUBLE.

Charge Is Perjury for Combatting Claim of Tennessee Woman.

If Eugene L. Bradford is a perjurer now, as alleged, he has been a bigamist for twenty-seven years. Even more, he is guilty of deserting, nearly forty years ago, the girl he is said to have married while serving as a soldier in the civil war.

Bradford, who lives at Kingston, Ill., was arrested yesterday on a bench warrant issued by Judge Kohlsaat. The charge is perjury.

The complaint on which the Kingston man was indicted by the federal grand jury last week is based on an unusual claim of circumstances. Bradford is fifty-seven years old, and for the greater part of his life he has lived in the vicinity of Kingston. Twenty-seven years ago, he was married in Sycamore, Ill., to Maggie E. Welch, and then, returning to Kingston, he resumed work as a blacksmith.

Two years ago a woman claiming to be Mrs. Ollie Bradford, nee George, of 214 North Second street, Knoxville, Tennessee, applied for a pension as the widow of Eugene L. Bradford, formerly a private in the Elgin battery of the Illinois Light artillery. The woman said she was married to Bradford at Knoxville on January 16 1865, and that she lost track of her husband a month afterward.

As the pension bureau had a Eugene L. Bradford on its rolls, the Nashville woman's claim was rejected and the circumstances explained. At the request of the self-styled Mrs. Bradford examiners of the pension office were sent to Kingston to interview Bradford, who admitted having been in Knoxville with the Union army in 1865, but denies any acquaintance with the woman who says she became his wife.

The indictment voted against Bradford charges him with having testified falsely in regard to his wife's claim for a pension.—Chicago Tribune.

The above statement explains the sudden arrest of Mr. Bradford on Tuesday, a special officer coming from Chicago with a bench warrant. Mr. Bradford and David Tower returned with the officer on the noon train but returned to Kingston the same evening at 6:56.

J. R. Foster Passes Away at His Home Near Delta, Colo.

DAMAGE SUIT SETTLED.

McAllister -- Thurlby Controversy Brought to a Close Saturday.

The damage suit in which J. P. McAllister and wife were the plaintiffs and John Thurlby and wife were the defendants was brought to a final settlement last Saturday forenoon through the intervention of friends of both parties.

There were two different suits started by McAllister and wife—one to gain possession of his farm and the other by Mrs. McAllister for assault with intent to kill. McAllister won the suit for possession of his farm and the latter suit has been settled.

A hearing of the latter case was had before Justice Mitchell at Sycamore some time ago but on account of the continued illness of Mrs. McAllister the hearing was postponed until Saturday afternoon.

Intimate friends of both parties, knowing that the suit would be expensive and long drawn out, thought it best to spend their best efforts to bring about a compromise which was affected and both parties have signed papers for a final settlement. It is understood that Mr. Thurlby will give peaceable possession of the farm on November 15, together with $650 in cash.

The many friends of the parties are pleased to know of a satisfactory settlement.

PROFESSIONAL BRETHREN

CHAPTER XIV.

WHEN I reached the conclusion that something ought to be done to save Mr. Goddard from himself, I began planning the best course to pursue. First I would have to meet him at night under circumstances similar to our first meeting, and then I would have the liberty to speak to him. To accomplish this I watched him every night, often sitting up until nearly daybreak to see if he left the house. For nearly a week I followed this course, and I could swear that he had not left his bed after midnight.

On the seventh night he had an agreement to meet Dr. Squires at his office, and, feeling worn out with my unsuccessful vigils, I retired early and enjoyed a sound night's sleep.

That night a big robbery was committed not five miles from the house, and the following morning everybody was talking about it. When I heard the news, a terrible suspicion seized me. My master was using his alleged appointments with the doctor as a means to throw me off the track. I tried to trace back the dates of the various robberies, and I imagined that I could establish a coincidence between them and Mr. Goddard's visits to Dr. Squires.

All that day my master was indolent and worn out, as usual, and I instantly attributed it now to his work of the preceding night and not to any poison which the doctor was administering to him.

When this light dawned clearly upon my mind, I knew exactly what to do. I slept soundly and peacefully during the next few nights, but about ten days later when my master announced that he had another appointment with Dr. Squires I prepared to spend the night following him.

He left the house about 8 o'clock. To my surprise, he did not take his horse, but walked leisurely down the road toward the old haunted mansion that the doctor had so long occupied. I followed him at a respectful distance, but he did not seem nervous or at all suspicious. He walked carelessly along, without once looking behind him.

He reached his destination about half past 8 and walked lightly up toward the house and entered. This did not astonish me, for I supposed that he really did go to the doctor's and probably submitted to some sort of treatment. His midnight marauding would begin after he left to go home.

I cautiously approached the house and tried to get a glimpse of the interior, but the blinds and shades were so closely drawn that I failed to get a glimpse of even the light. I contented myself with examining the burglar alarm, for at some future time I might find it useful to unfasten it from a window without giving an alarm.

The minutes passed slowly. Not a sound or movement from inside could be heard. Accustomed to waiting in patience for a long time, I did not find my vigil so difficult. I entertained myself in various ways to keep from falling asleep. A few moments of sleep might spoil everything for me.

It must have been shortly after midnight when I heard the front door creak on its hinges. I was concealed behind some shrubbery at the time, where I could command a good view of the entrance to the house. The door, I knew, was opening, but no ray of light streamed through the crack. The whole house was, in fact, wrapped in darkness.

I saw the shadows of two men on the front porch, and by their general outlines I knew that one was my master and the other Dr. Squires. Neither spoke for some time. Then I heard the doctor say in a low, muffled voice: "Now, Charles, the house is three miles below, and you ought to reach it in half an hour."

"Yes; I'll reach it in half an hour." "You must be extra cautious, for there are many detectives around," the doctor continued.

"I shall be very careful." "Then go and return as soon as possible."

They separated. The doctor stole noiselessly back into the house and my master walked stealthily down the gravelly drive toward the main highway.

His manner had completely changed. Every movement he made indicated suspicion and alertness. He was not nervous, but every faculty was strained. He was now the professional burglar on the scent. The slight breaking of a twig or the clinking of a pebble, I knew, would arouse and alarm him.

My prey was not an easy one to follow. He would stop and turn upon his tracks in the most unexpected way. His ears and eyes appeared gifted with wonderful powers of sensation. I had to increase the distance between us to avoid detection.

I managed to keep him in sight for about a mile, and then he suddenly gave me the slip. In some inexplicable manner he had dodged away from me and disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed him. Chagrined at thus being thrown off the track, I put all my energies at work to regain the lost trail. For two hours I wandered around, vainly trying to catch a glimpse of the man. I became so reckless that I would have exposed my person to him if it would have discovered his whereabouts to me.

Finally I gave it up in disgust. I seated myself under a tree near the highway and reflected. Certainly I was baffled for the night. I was on the point of returning home when the words of Dr. Squires recurred to me. The two were evidently engaged in the same criminal practices, and they would probably meet again that night somewhere.

With this thought uppermost in my mind I cautiously retraced my steps to the doctor's house. Once I thought that I had discovered my master again by accident, but upon closer observation I found that I was on the very point of accosting a detective. An arrest at such a time of the night might lead to unpleasant complications, and so I remained half an hour hidden in the bushes until the man had disappeared.

When I reached the old mansion, everything was as dark and gloomy as when I left it to follow my master. There was not the sign of a living being around. I cautiously started to walk up the gravelly drive, and the crunching noise of my boots sounded clear and distinct on the night air. I just had time to drop down behind some shrubbery before the front door of the house opened, and the dark shadow of a man seemed to flit out of it. I remained perfectly quiet, not daring to move or scarcely breathe. Undoubtedly the noise made by my boots had attracted the attention of somebody in the mansion.

I remained in this reclining position for a full half hour. The shadow on the porch remained so perfectly still that I half imagined that it was an illusion or the reflection of some intervening object. But my policy has ever been to make sure of a thing before deciding what course to pursue, and so I accepted the benefit of the doubt and waited patiently. Once or twice I thought of the tales of spirits and ghosts related about the old mansion and of how they walked through the empty rooms after midnight and made free with all earthly occupants. This did not disturb me, however, for I knew that somebody besides spirits was awake around the house that night.

I was getting tired of watching that immovable figure on the porch, and my eyelids were winking and blinking spasmodically when my ears caught a sound directly back of me. I did not dare move my head an inch, but the thought of the bloodthirsty Dunes suddenly made me cold and clammy. I imagined I detected the patter of their

"There are many detectives around," feet on the drive, and I gripped my revolver tightly, determined to make a desperate stand for my life.

A moment later my feelings were considerably relieved. The steps approached nearer and nearer—soft, stealthy, delicate steps that might have been made by a child. Then the figure of a man loomed up within three yards of me and moved swiftly toward the house.

But in that momentary glimpse I caught the features of my master. In his hands he carried a clumsy bundle or article, which I failed to make out. Then for the first time the shadow on the porch moved. The two met at the top of the steps and quickly disappeared in the house, the door closing noiselessly behind them.

I would have given much just then to have had the power to penetrate behind those wooden walls or to have raised the shades and looked into the doctor's office, where I knew that a light must be burning. But I felt that my quest was ended for the night and that further work would be useless. After waiting around another half hour I quietly stole out of the yard and hurried home to reflect over the strange occurrences of the night.

Advance Engines and Threshers

The Advance Husker-Shredder

The Advance Husker-Shredder is built on honor. It has strength, durability, safety and capacity. It is designed to do a large work for the thresherman after his separator is laid away, thereby continuing the earning power of his engine far into the winter. The advent of the Husker-Shredder has brought many of the farmer's troubles to an end, and the long job of husking by hand is now crowded into a few days. The crop may be quickly marketed, and the increase in "results" by the saving of the corn fodder hay is wonderful. Corn hay has proven to be more profitable as a food for stock than either clover or timothy, and is rapidly appearing in the market in baled form. The Advance Husker-Shredder has a windstacker attached, which enables the farmer to carefully mow the corn hay away without the expense of the help needed for other hay crops. A feeder may be attached if desired, while the shelled corn is entirely removed from the stack and neatly sacked by a bagger attached. After leaving the husking rolls, the carrier delivers the corn ears to the wagon in marketable shape.

May Save Millions of Dollars!

Millions of dollars are annually going to waste in corn-raising states, owing to the fact that farmers have husked the standing corn, leaving the fodder in the field for their stock to run over, treading the most valuable portion underfoot. Corn hay may be had at very small cost, and produces more heat, more flesh, more and richer milk than does timothy or clover. It will pay you to see our sample machine, and talk the matter over.

Confidence Is the Main Thing....

You Must Have Confidence in the Firm you deal with, or you can never feel safe. When a firm advertises to sell you gold dollars for fifty cents, or, in other words, offers to sell merchandise for half its value, there is something wrong, and you do not believe it for the simple reason that it cannot be done successfully. We don't do that kind of business. If we sell you a suit of clothes for ten dollars, fifteen dollars, or twenty dollars, as the case may be, or anything else in our line, you will find that it cannot be duplicated for any less any place, same quality of goods considered. Your Confidence in us and in our Clothing will be more than ever justified this Fall when you see the selection of
