DEFENDS ADMINISTRATION

President Roosevelt Pays Tribute to Insular Governors.

TAFT, ROOT AND WOOD

At the Alumni Banquet at Harvard the President Speaks of Three Very Famous College Men.

At the banquet of the Harvard alumni, President Roosevelt made a brilliant address. His theme was "The College man in Politics," and his talk was practical, earnest and eloquent. Portions of the address follow:

"Gentlemen, I want to speak of three college graduates because of the service they have done the public. If a college means anything it means fitting a man to do better service than he could do without it; if it does not mean that it means nothing, and if a man does not get that out of it he gets less than nothing out of it. No man has a right to arrogate to himself one particle of superiority because he has had a college education, but he is bound if he is in truth a man, to feel that the fact of his having had a college education imposes upon him a heavier burden of responsibility; that it makes it doubly incumbent on him to do well and nobly in his life, private and public.

"I want to speak of three men who during the past three or four years have met that requirement—of a graduate of Hamilton, Elihu Root; a graduate of Yale, Governor Taft; and of a fellow Harvard man, Leonard Wood—men who did things—did not say how they should do them, but did them themselves—men who have met that greatest of our national needs—the need for the service that cannot be bought, the need for the service that can only be rendered by the man willing to forego the material advantages, for it has got to be given at the man's own material cost.

"Leonard Wood four years ago went to Cuba; he served there ever since; has rendered services to that county of the kind that, if performed 3,000 years ago, would have made him a hero mixed up with the sun god in various ways; a man who devoted his whole time to these four years, and who thought of nothing else, did nothing else, save to try to bring up the standard of political and social life in that island; to clean it physically and morally; to make justice even and fair in it; to found a school system that should be akin to our own; to teach the people, after four centuries of misrule, that there were such things as governmental righteousness and honesty and fair play for all men on their merits as men.

"He did all that. He is a man of slender means. He did it on his pay as an army officer and as governor of the islands. Sixty millions of dollars passed through his hands and he came out having had to draw on his slender means in order that he might come out even when he left the island. Credit to him? Yes, in a way. In another, no particular credit, because he was built so that he could do nothing else.

"And well, Taft, Judge Taft, Governor Taft, who has been the head of the Philippine commission and who has gone back there. Taft, the most brilliant graduate of his year at Yale, the youngest Yale man upon whom that institution ever conferred the degree of LL. D.; a man who, having won high position at the bar and then served as solicitor general, with all his tastes impelling him to a judicial career and appointed to the United States bench, was asked to give up the position in order to go to the other side of the world to take up an infinitely difficult and infinitely dangerous problem and to do his best to solve it. He has done his best.

"He came back here the other day. The man has always had the honorable ambition to get upon the Supreme Court bench, and he knew that I had always hoped he would be put upon the Supreme Court, and when there was a question of a vacancy arising I said to him: 'Governor, I think I ought to tell you that if a vacancy comes in the Supreme Court, while it would give you an opportunity to be put in the position you would like to have, I think I ought to tell you that if such a vacancy should occur I do not see how I could possibly give it to you, for I need you where you are.'

"He said to me: 'Mr. President, it has always been my dream to be in the Supreme Court, but if you should offer me a justiceship now and at the same time Congress should take off entirely my salary as governor, I should go back to the Philippines nevertheless, for those people need me and expect me back and believe I won't desert them.'

"He has gone back, gone as a strong friend among weaker friends, to help them upward along the stony and difficult path of self government; to do his part and a great part, in making the American name a symbol of honor and good faith in the Philippine islands; to govern with justice and with that firmness, that absence of weakness, which is only another side of justice. He has gone back to do all of that because it is his duty as he sees it. We are to be congratulated, we Americans, that we have a fellow American like Taft.

"And now, Elihu Root, who, unlike myself, President Eliot, but like most of you present, comes of the old New England stock, whose great-grandfather stood beside Leonard Wood's great-grandfather at Concord bridge; Elihu Root, who had worked his way up from being a poor and unknown country boy in New York to a position where in a year or two he had the leadership of the bar of the great city within his grasp, gave it up, made the very great pecuniary sacrifice implied in giving it up, and accepted the position under President McKinley of Secretary of War, a position which for the last three years and at present amounts to being not only the Secretary of War but the secretary for the islands, the secretary for the colonies at the same time; who has done the most exhausting and most responsible work of any man in the administration, more so than the work of the President, because circumstances have been such that with a man of Root's wonderful ability, industry and conscientiousness the President could not help but devolve upon him work that made his task one under which almost any other man I know would have staggered.

"He has done all. Taft has done it. These three men have rendered that service. I can do nothing for them. I can show my appreciation of them in no way, save the wholly insufficient one of standing up for them and for their works and that I will do."

GENOA WILL CELEBRATE.

The Glorious Fourth Will be Fittingly Observed.

GOOD PROGRAM OF SPORTS.

Dancing Afternoon and Evening Grand Display of Fireworks at Night—Burlington Band of 17 Pieces.

As has been the custom in Genoa for many years past, the glorious Fourth will be fittingly celebrated. The committee in charge has completed all arrangements for a grand celebration.

A paper was circulated among the merchants some time ago and a neat sum of money was secured. It is expected that many from the surrounding country will gather and a day of sport will be the result.

The Burlington band of seventeen pieces has been engaged and a splendid program of music will be discoursed throughout the day.

In the evening a large quantity of fire works will close the day.

The following is the list of prizes and the committees in charge:

Program	Prizes
Ball Game	$5.00
Hose Cart, $3 and $2	5.00
100 yard race	2.00
225 lb. fat man race	1.50

WENT THROUGH BRIDGE.

Electric Car with Thirty-Five Passengers Goes Through Bridge on E. A. & N.—Only Three People Hurt.

Carrying thirty-five people with it, a car on the Elgin, Aurora and Southern Traction company lines, en route from Aurora to Elgin, went through the middle span of the bridge across the Fox river at St. Charles Tuesday morning and fell a distance of twenty feet into the swollen river below. By a veritable miracle none of the passengers received fatal injuries and all were rescued from their perilous position by the hundreds of citizens who were attracted to the scene immediately after the accident.

Women screamed and fainted. Men thrust their fists through the windows of the car and when all had been rescued the following were the injured:

Mrs. W. R. Heck, Dundee, injured internally.

Mrs. Granger, Geneva, hip hurt, but recently released from Presbyterian hospital, where she underwent an operation.

UNCLE SAM PROSPEROUS

Good Reports at the Close of the Past Fiscal Year.

LARGE BALANCE IN TREASURY.

In Spite of the Philippine Trouble, Prosperity Smiles on the United States. Facts and Figures in Brief.

Uncle Sam started a new fiscal year July 1 with a surplus of nearly ninety million dollars. In spite of the great amounts necessary for the Philippine military establishment and unusually large appropriations by Congress, the finances of the country have been so well looked after that Uncle Sam can buy a few firecrackers to celebrate with.

That the United States is in first-class financial condition may be judged from the fact that there is now on hand an available cash balance—money subject to appropriation—of two hundred million dollars. All told the government has on hand the enormous sum of $1,119,000,000, of which four hundred and ninety-seven million dollars is in gold, probably the largest gold hoard held by any nation in the world. Uncle Sam has eight hundred and thirty-five million dollars in trust funds for the redemption of outstanding notes and certificates, one hundred and sixty-two million in his "general fund," and one hundred and twenty-seven million deposited in national banks.

The expenditures of the government for the fiscal year just closed were thirty-seven million dollars less than for the year previous. Last Saturday's official treasury statement contains the following figures:

RECEIPTS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR.
Customs	$53,791,131.50
Internal revenue	270,351,051.20
Miscellaneous	35,102,092.52
Total	$559,244,275.22

EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR.
Civil and miscellaneous	$113,184,950.63
War	112,031,414.33
Navy	67,027,305.04
Indian	16,010,516.32
Pensions	13,455,016.18
Interest	2,021,000.07
Total	$424,739,216.57

The excess of receipts over expenditures (one day to be added to complete the fiscal year) is $80,232,187.

Secretary Shaw says: "The prosperity of the country is so great that all calculations are likely to be upset. If Congress reduces taxes it seems to make little difference in the income of the government. The money comes rolling in faster than we know what to do with it."

IMPORTANT WORK OF CONGRESS.

The work accomplished by Congress during the past fiscal year may be briefly summed up as follows:

Passed isthmian canal bill. Repealed war tax revenue bill. Extended Chinese exclusion laws.

Established Philippine tariff. Extended national bank charters.

Established permanent census office. Established great irrigation system.

Regulated manufacture of oleomargarine. Rejected Cuban reciprocity.

BILLS LIKELY TO PASS.

Restricting anarchy in the United States.

Granting civil government to the Philippines.

BILLS IN FORMATIVE STAGE.

Ship subsidy bill. Omnibus statehood bill, admitting Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Appalachian forest reserve bill. Bill amending present immigration laws.

Creation of new department of commerce.

Appropriation for the session, $69,445,000 (incomplete).

Isthmian canal, first estimate, $50,000,000; entire cost (estimated), $184,000,000.

MARRIED MONDAY EVENING.

Miss Elizabeth A. McCormick of Genoa and Thornton J. Hoover of Elgin are united in marriage.

Miss Elizabeth A. McCormick of Genoa and Thornton J. Hoover of Elgin were united in marriage at the home of the bride at 6:30 o'clock Monday evening.

Rev. Hester officiated in the presence of a few friends and relatives. After the ceremony a wedding supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoover left on the evening train for a short honeymoon after which they will be at home at Elgin where the groom is employed.

DR. GARVIN DIES IN OMAHA.

Came to Genoa in 1847,—was one of the first physicians in the county.—Was an Early Supervisor.

Dr. I. W. Garvin, one of the first physicians of DeKalb county, passed away Monday evening at the home of his son, 124 South Thirty-fifth street, Omaha, Neb.

The deceased was one of the most prominent residents of this county and in the years of 1852-1855 he served as supervisor from Genoa.

In the year of 1860 he moved to Belvidere after remaining at that place a short time he removed to Sycamore where he practiced for twenty-five years.

Upon the expiration of this period he retired from business life and made his home with his sons who are bankers at Omaha, where he passed away at the respected age of eighty-three years.

Two sons survive him, Edward C. and Frank A. both of Omaha. Few of the old settlers of this county had a wider acquaintance than Dr. Garvin. He was an interesting conversationalist, witty and sociable and a successful business manager.

The funeral services were held at Omaha Wednesday afternoon and the remains arrived in Sycamore on Thursday forenoon when services were conducted at the grave by Rev. B. M. Southgate, pastor of the Congregational church.

AGED ELGIN MERCHANT DIES.

Chas. J. Schultz Passed Away Tuesday—Had Been in Dry Goods Business in Elgin for Many Years.

Chas. J. Schultz, one of the oldest merchants in Elgin and well-known in this vicinity passed away very suddenly of heart disease Tuesday morning at his home in Elgin.

The deceased was born at Jastrow, West Prussia, Feb. 4, 1836.

For many years he conducted a dry goods store on Fountain square and of late years has been a member of the Elgin Rug Manufacturing company and only last Saturday sold his interests to his partner, A. Ikert.

TO A YOUNG LAWYER.

Here is a recipe which the great Lord Russell left behind him for the guidance of his son, a younger member of the bar:

Begin each day's work with a motto, of what is to be done, in order of urgency.

Do one thing only at a time.

In any business interviews note in your diary or in your entries the substance of what takes place—for collaboration in any future difficulty.

Arrange any case, whether for brief or for your own judgment, in the order of time.

Be scrupulously exact down to the smallest item in money matters, etc., in your account of them.

Be careful to keep your papers in neat and orderly fashion.

There is no need to confess ignorance to a client, but never be above asking advice from those competent to give it in any matter of doubt, and never affect to understand when you do not understand thoroughly.

Get to the bottom of any affair intrusted to you—even the simplest—and do each piece of work as if you were a tradesman turning out a best sample of his manufacture by which he wishes to be judged.

Do not be content with being an expert master of form and detail, but strive to be a lawyer.

Always be straight forward and sincere.—London Answers.

PROVED SHE WAS WRONG.

An Experience That Was Rather Rough on the Bishop.

The father of a certain bishop was, like several other members of the same family, quite prodigiously ugly. One day, as he sat in an omnibus, he was annoyed by the persistent staring of a man, who presently unburdened himself as follows:

"You're a parson, ain't you?"

"Well, yes; that is so."

"Look 'ere, parson; would you mind comin' some with me to see my wife?"

"Imagining the wife was sick and needing assistance, the clergyman, at great inconvenience to himself, went with the man. On arriving at the house the man shouted to his wife to come downstairs, and, pointing to the astonished parson, said, with a grin of delight:

"Look 'ere, Sairy. Yersaid this mornin' as I was the ugliest chap in England. Now, just yer look at this bloke!"—Stray Stories.

WHAT SHALL I ASK?

What shall I ask to fill my cup of life
Till it run o'er,
And I can say: "Enough, my soul;
No more!"
What shall I ask? Ah! surely more than these
Terrestrial years—
So bright, so brief, so sorely marred
With tears.
Ah! surely more. My wish is vast and bold,
Yet cannot bate
Its deathless daring. Here my crave
Of fate.
The fullness of the earth that it be mine;
Then, forth and far,
Into the outer glittering mystery
Of star on star.
Throughout th' illimitable wonderment
That I may see;
Nor rest till, at the center by God's throne,
I stand and know.
And see the eternal glory—wide and deep,
Perfect and beautiful—around me sweep;
All that jarred here
Sounding at last melodious
And clear.

My Strangest Case

BY GUY BOOTHBY.

Author of "Dr. Kikola," "The Beautiful White Devil," "Pharos, The Egyptian," Etc.

"What a duffer I am, to be sure!" I said to myself. "If I begin to get notions like this in my head there is no knowing where I may end. As if any girl would ever think twice about me!"

Thereupon I descended to the drawing-room, which I found empty. It was a true woman's room, daintily furnished, with little knick-knacks here and there, a work-basket put neatly away for the Sabbath, and an open piano with one of Chopin's works upon the music-rest. Leading out of the drawing-room was a small conservatory, filled with plants. It was a pretty little place and I could not refrain from exploring it. I am passionately fond of flowers, but my life at that time was not one that permitted me much leisure to indulge in my liking. As I stood now, however, in the charming place, among the rows of neatly-arranged pots, I experienced a sort of waking dream. I seemed to see myself standing in this very conservatory, hard at work upon my flowers, a pipe in my mouth and my favorite old soft felt hat upon my head. Crime and criminals were alike forgotten; I no longer lived in a dingy part of the town, and what was better than all I had—

"Do you know I feel almost inclined to offer you the proverbial penny," said Miss Kitwater's voice behind me, at the drawing-room door. "Is it permissible to ask what you were thinking about?"

I am not of course prepared to swear it, but I honestly believe, for the first time for many years, I blushed.

"I was thinking how very pleasant a country life must be," I said, making the first excuse that came to me. "I almost wish that I could lead one."

"Then why don't you? Surely it would not be so very difficult?"

"I am rather afraid it would," I answered. "And yet I don't know why it should be."

"Perhaps Mrs. Fairfax would not care about it," she continued, as we returned to the drawing-room together.

"Good gracious!" I remarked. "There is no Mrs. Fairfax. I am the most confirmed of old bachelors. I wonder you could not see that. Is not the word crustiness written plainly upon my forehead?"

"I am afraid I cannot see it," she answered. "I am not quite certain who it was, but I fancy it was my uncle who informed me that you were married."

"It was very kind of him," I said. "But it certainly is not the case. I fear my wife would have rather a lonely time of it if it were. I am obliged to be away from home so much, you see, and for so long at a time."

"You must be indeed a strange profession, Mr. Fairfax, if I may say so," she continued. "Some time ago I came across an account, in a magazine, of your life, and the many famous cases in which you had taken part."

"Ah! I remember the wretched thing," I said. "I am sorry that you should ever have seen it."

"And why should you be sorry?"

"Because it is a silly thing, and I have always regretted allowing the man to publish it. He certainly called upon me and asked me a lot of questions, after which he went away and wrote that article. Ever since then I have felt like a concealed ass, who tried to make himself out more clever than he really was."

"I don't think you would do that," she said. "But, if you will let me say so, yours must be a very trying life, and also an extremely dangerous one. I am afraid you must look upon human nature from a very strange point of view!"

"Not more strange probably than you do," I answered.

"But you are continually seeing the saddest side of it. To you all the miseries that a life of crime entails are visible. The greater part of your time is spent among desperate men who are without hope, and to whom even their own shadows are a constant menace. I wonder that you still manage to retain your kind heart."

"But how do you know that my heart is kind?" I inquired.

"If for no other reason, simply because you have taken up my uncle's case," she answered. "Do you think when he was so rude to you just now, that I could not see that you pitied him, and for that reason you forebore to take advantage of your power? I know you have a kind heart."

"And you find it difficult to assimilate that kind heart with the remorseless detective of Public Life?" "I find it difficult to recognize in you the man who, on a certain notable occasion, went into a thieves' den in Chicago unaccompanied, and after a terrible struggle in which you nearly lost your life succeeded in effecting the arrest of a notorious murderer."

At that moment the gong in the hall sounded for lunch, and I was by no means sorry for the interruption. We found Kitwater and Codd awaiting our coming in the dining-room, and we thereupon sat down to the meal. When we left the room again, we sat in the garden and smoked, and later in the afternoon my hostess conducted me over her estate, showed me her vineyard, introduced me to her sleek Jerseys, who had their home in the meadow I had seen from the window; to her poultry, pigs and the pigeons who came fluttering about her, confident that they would come to no harm. Meanwhile her uncle had resumed his restless pacing up and down the path on which I had first seen him. Codd had returned to his archaeological studies, and I was alone with Miss Kitwater. We were standing alone together, I remember, at the gate that separated the garden from the meadow-land. I knew as well as possible, indeed I had known it since we had met in the churchyard that morning, that she had something to say to me, something concerning which she had not quite made up her mind. What it was, however, I fancied I could hazard a very good guess, but I was determined not to forestall her, but to wait and let her broach it to me in her own way. This, I fancied, she was now about to do.

"Mr. Fairfax," she began, resting her clasped hands upon the bar of the gate as she spoke, "I want, if you will allow me, to have a serious talk with you. I could not have a better opportunity than the present, and, such as it is, I want to make the best of it."

"I am quite at your service, Miss Kitwater," I replied, "and if I can be of any use to you I hope you will tell me. Pray let me know what I can do for you?"

"It is about my uncle and Mr. Codd that I want to speak to you," she said, sinking her voice a little, as if she were afraid they might hear. "And what about them?"

"I want to be loyal to them, and yet I want to know what you think of the whole affair," she said, looking intently at me as she spoke. "Believe me, I have good and sufficient reasons for my request."

"I am to tell exactly what I think about their pursuit of this man

AT THAT MOMENT MISS KITWATER MADE HER REAPPEARANCE IN THE GARDEN.

Hayle? And what chances of success I think they possess?" I said. "I am not thinking so much of their success," she returned, "as of the real nature of their case."

"I believe I understand what is passing in your mind," I said. "Indeed I should not be surprised if the suspicion you entertain is not the same as I have myself."

"You have been suspicious, then?" "I could scarcely fail to be," I replied.

"Perhaps you will tell me what you suspect?"

"Will you forgive me, in my turn, if I am abrupt, or if I speak my mind a little too plainly?"

"You could not do that," she answered with a sigh. "I want to know your exact thoughts, and then I shall be able to form my own conclusions."

"Well," I said, "before I begin, may I put one or two questions to you? You will, of course, remember that I had never seen or heard of your uncle and Mr. Codd until they stopped me on Ludgate Hill. They were and practically are strangers to me. I have heard their story of their treasure, but I have not heard what anyone else has to say upon the subject."

"I think I understand. Now what are your questions?"

"In the first place, did your late father ever speak to you of his brother as being a missionary in China?"

She shook her head, and from the look upon her face I could see that I had touched upon something painful. This, at least, was one of the things that had struck her as suspicious.

"If he were a missionary, I am quite sure my father did not know it," she said. "In fact I always understood that he was somewhat of a scapegrace, and in consequence could never settle down to anything. That is your first, now what is your second question, Mr. Fairfax?"

I paused for a moment before I replied.

"My second partakes more of the nature of an assertion than a question," I answered. "As I read it, you are more afraid of what may happen should the two men meet than anything else."

"Yes, that is just what I am afraid of," she replied. "My uncle's temper is so violent, and his desire for revenge so absorbing, that I dare not think what would happen if he came into actual contact with Hayle. Now that I have replied to your questions, will you give me the answer I want? That is to say will you tell me what you think of the whole affair?"

"If you wish it, I will," I said, slowly. "You have promised to permit me to be candid, and I am going to take advantage of that permission. In my own mind I do not believe the story they tell. I do not believe that they were ever missionaries, though we have convincing proofs that they have been in the hands of the Chinese. That Hayle betrayed them I have not the least doubt, it seems consistent with his character, but where they obtained the jewels, that are practically the keystones to the whole affair, I have no more notion than you. They may have been honestly come by, or they may not. So far as the present case is concerned that fact is immaterial. There is still, however, one vital point we have to consider. If the gems in question belong equally to the three men, each is entitled to his proper share, either of the stones or of the amounts realized by the sale. That share, as you already know, would amount to a considerable sum of money. Your uncle, I take it, has not a penny-piece in the world, and his companion is in the same destitute condition. Now we will suppose that I find Hayle for them, and they meet. Does it not seem to you quite possible that your uncle's rage might lead him to do something desperate, in order to revenge himself upon the other? But if he could command himself he would probably get his money? If, on the other hand, they do not meet, then what is to be done? Forgive me, Miss Kitwater, for prying into your private affairs, but in my opinion it is manifestly unfair that you should have to support these two men for the rest of their existences."

"You surely must see that I would rather do that than let my father's brother commit a crime," she returned, more earnestly than she had yet spoken.

The position was decidedly an awkward one. It was some proof of the girl's sterling qualities that she should be prepared to make such a sacrifice for the sake of a man whom it was certainly impossible to love, and for that reason even to respect. I looked at her with an admiration in my face that I did not attempt to conceal. I said nothing by way of praise, however. It would have been an insult to her to have even hinted at such a thing.

"Pardon me," I said at last, "but there is one thing that must be taken into consideration. Some day, Miss Kitwater, you may marry, and in that case your husband might not care about the arrangement you have made. Such things have happened before now."

She blushed a rosy red and hesitated before she replied.

"I do not consider it very likely that I shall ever marry," she answered. "And even if I did I should certainly not marry a man who would object to my doing what I consider to be my duty. And now that we have discussed all this, Mr. Fairfax, what do you think we had better do? I understood you to say to my uncle that you intend leaving for Paris to-morrow morning, in order to continue your search for the man Hayle. Supposing you find him, what will you do then?"

"In such a case," I said, slowly, looking at her all the time, "I should endeavor to get your uncle's and Codd's share of the treasure from him. If I am successful, then I shall let him go where he pleases."

"And supposing you are unsuccessful in obtaining the money or the gems?"

"Then I must endeavor to think of some other way," I replied, "but somehow I do not think I shall be unsuccessful."

"Nor do I," she answered, looking me full and fair in the face. "I fancy you know that I believe in you most implicitly, Mr. Fairfax."

"In that case, do you mind shaking hands upon it?" I said.

"I will do so with much pleasure," she answered. "You cannot imagine what a weight you have lifted off my mind. I have been so depressed about it lately that I have scarcely known what to do. I have lain awake at night, turning it over and over in my mind, and trying to convince myself as to what was best to be done. Then my uncle told me you were coming down here, and I resolved to put the case before you as I have done and to ask your opinion."

She gave me her little hand, and I took it and held it in my own. Then I released it and we strode back along the garden-path together without another word. The afternoon was well advanced by this time, and when we reached the summer-house, where Codd was still reading, we found that a little wicker tea-table had been brought out from the house and that chairs had been placed for us round it. To my thinking there is nothing that becomes a pretty woman more than the mere commonplace act of pouring out tea. It was certainly so in this case. When I looked at the white cloth upon the table, the heavy brass tray, and the silver jugs and teapot, and thought of my own cracker earthenware vessel, then reposing in a cupboard in my office, and in which I brewed my cup of tea every afternoon, I smiled to myself. I felt that I should never use it again without recalling this meal. After that I wondered whether it would ever be my good fortune to sit in this garden again, and to sip my Orange Pekoe from the same dainty service. The thought that I might not do so was, strangely enough, an unpleasant one, and I put it from me with all promptness. During the meal, Kitwater scarcely uttered a word. We had exhausted the probabilities of the case long since, and I soon found that he could think or talk of nothing else. At six o'clock I prepared to make my adieux. My train left Bishopstowe for London at the half-hour, and I should just have time to walk the distance comfortably. To my delight my hostess decided to go to church, and said she would walk with me as far as the lych-gate. She accordingly left us and went into the house to make her toilet. As soon as she had gone Kitwater fumbled his way across to where I was sitting, and having discovered a chair beside me seated himself in it.

Undiplomatic Diplomat.

There is a story of exemplary American kindness of heart and absolute lack of all the fine nothings of etiquette which are the very breath of courts and diplomatic life. The story concerns a former American minister to St. Petersburg at one of the elaborate and very formal receptions or levees which the emperor and empress give on New Year's day. All the diplomats stand in line in their order of precedence, and their majesties walk down the line to exchange greetings with each in turn. On this occasion the empress, now the dowager, was not present, having just given birth to one of the younger princesses. It seems also that the good wife of the American was at home occupied with a similar domestic duty. The emperor came down the line and asked after the health of each of the gentlemen present, at the same time exchanging the usual seasonable greetings. So when he came to the American he did not ask the usual question: "I hope you have good news from home?" Of course he had and our full-hearted representative could not keep it a secret. "Yes, thank your majesty, excellent news. It is a boy and weighs 12 pounds." — Chalmers Roberts, in World's Work.

When Mark Twain Flunked.

A few nights ago Mark Twain told to some friends a story about himself which he failed to incorporate in "Life on the Mississippi." On one occasion when he started on a trip down the river on a flat boat he was advised never to answer the questions asked by river men on other boats and never to bandy words with them, as he would be sure always to come out second best. He followed the advice religiously for a time, but one day he thought he saw a chance to get the better of a river man, who called out:

"Hey, thar, what yer loaded with?" "Jackasses. Don't you want to come aboard?" yelled back Twain.

"That's what I reckoned, seein' as how they let their biggest donkey hev ther run of the deck," came back Twain made a dive below as all the river men in the neighborhood set up a derisive laugh at his expense.

President Roosevelt's stand for Cuban reciprocity has won him many friends in the rank and file of the party. Although he was defeated, he has lost nothing. He tried to carry out President McKinley's promises to Cuba, and a few republican senators defeated his efforts. It is more than hinted that they were bought by the trusts. The president comes out of the fight, although temporarily defeated, with the honest approval of every true republican.

Keeps Eggs Fresh.

Mr. Louis Parisot, an eminent French chemist, has discovered a liquid which he claims to be capable of preserving the freshness of eggs for a period of 12 years. A year ago he placed a large number of these delicacies in the liquid, getting a magistrate to witness his act and seal the tank with his official seal. A few days ago the tank was opened in the presence of his worship, the eggs being found to be in excellent condition. Four eggs were selected haphazard out of the tank, and on being boiled were eaten, the magistrate pronouncing them to be excellent and possessing a delicious flavor.—London Mail.

TWO FOREST RESERVES.

Are Planned by Uncle Sam for the State of Utah.

Notice has been received at the Salt Lake land office that Uncle Sam proposes to make two large forest reserves in the state of Utah. One is to be situated in Cache county and the other in Garfield and Wayne. The two reserves will comprise 775,000 acres of land.

The notice was received from Land Commissioner Binger Derman, of the department of the interior. It directs the officials of the land office to withdraw from sale, settlement or entry, the number of acres of land mentioned, pending the consideration of the proposition to create two forest reserves in Utah. The reserve in Cache county is to be known as the Logan reserve and the other the Aquarius.

The Logan reserve is situated about three miles east of Logan, on its western boundary, and its eastern boundary will be five miles west of Bear lake. The Aquarius reserve will be situated on the headwaters of the Escalante and Fremont rivers, and will be about twice the size of the Logan reserve.—Salt Lake Herald.

FOREIGNERS IN CITIES.

Largest Proportion in Fall River, Smallest in Montgomery, Ala.

The larger part of the foreign-born population of the United States is found, of course, in the large cities, says the New York Sun. But there are few cities having more than one-third of their population foreign born, and there is no city in which one-half of the population is foreign born.

The nearest approach to the latter condition is found in Fall River, where 48 per cent. of the population, including many French-Canadians, is foreign born; Lawrence, Mass., 45 per cent.; Lowell, Mass., 43; Passaic, N. J., 46; Woonsocket, R. I., 44; Manchester, Mass., 42; New York, 37; Paterson, 36; Boston, 35; and in the west, Chicago, 34; Detroit, 33; Milwaukee, 31; Cleveland, 32; San Francisco, 34, and Duluth, 39.

These are the cities having the largest proportionate foreign-born population. The number of cities in which native-born Americans not only predominate, but predominate so largely as to constitute fully or nearly nine-tenths of the population, is more numerous.

Binghamton has 89 per cent. of its population native born and Elmira has 82. Allentown, Pa., one of the strongholds of the Pennsylvania Germans, has 91 per cent. of its population native born; Harrisburg, the Pennsylvania capital, has 95 per cent.; Washington, the national capital, has 92; Richmond and Norfolk, Va., have 96; York, Pa., has 96; Chattanooga and Nashville, Tenn., have 96; Topeka, Kan., has 90; Indianapolis has 89, Terre Haute has 92, Charleston has 95, and Lexington, Ky., 96.

But the American city which comes nearer to having an exclusively native population than any other is, perhaps, Montgomery, Ala., with 98 per cent., though Montgomery does not usually rank among the important cities of the United States.

Little Rock, Ark., has 94 per cent. of American population and Los Angeles 80.

The smallest railway has been built to the order of Mr. Percy H. Leigh in an annex of his residence at Brentwood, Worsley, near Manchester. The little line is really a toy, but one of the most marvelous toys ever made. In all respects except size it is an exact replica of the track, locomotives, rolling stock and station equipment of the London & North-western railway. It has been placed in a room 90 feet long and 30 feet wide, and is raised on trestles three feet high.

TRADE WITH ALASKA.

Facts Compiled by the National Bureau of Statistics.

"Commercial Alaska in 1902" is the title of a monograph prepared by the treasury bureau of statistics for publication in the forthcoming issue of the monthly summary. In this the commercial conditions, opportunities and prospects in Alaska are set forth, the number of industries at the present time, the routes of travel, the methods of reaching that once distant but now accessible territory, and a summarization of the commercial and financial results of ownership of that territory by the United States. This statement is presented at the present moment both by reason of the growing interest in Alaska and especially because of the fact that the bureau of statistics is to publish in future monthly statements of the commerce of Alaska with ports of the United States.

Alaska, for which the United States paid Russia $7,200,000 in 1867, has supplied furs, fish and gold amounting to about $150,000,000 in value, about equally divided between these three items; that the investments of capital from the United States in Alaska are probably $25,000,000, with a large additional sum invested in transportation to that territory; and the annual shipments of merchandise to Alaska now aggregate more than $12,000,000, and have aggregated since the purchase nearly or quite $100,000,000. Meantime, the population has grown from an estimated 30,000 at the date of purchase to 32,052 in 1890, 63,592 in 1900, and an estimated 75,000 at the present time.

The number of fur seals taken on the Pribilof islands from 1870 to 1901 is 2,187,317 (estimated value, $35,000,000), and the value of the seal and other furs taken since the purchase of Alaska by the United States is estimated at about $30,000,000. The fur seal industry, which has declined in the last few years, was succeeded by the fishing industry, Alaska now supplying about one-half of the salmon of the country. The value of the salmon pack in Alaska last year is estimated at about $7,000,000, and the total value of the fish taken in Alaska since the purchase about $50,000,000, while the value of gold and silver mined since the purchase is also about $50,000,000.

WHIMS OF EMPLOYERS.

Some Refuse to Hire Fat Men—Others Dislike Gray Eyes.

"I wouldn't employ a fat man," said one of our largest employers recently. "Fat men are lazy. I never knew one who wasn't. I used to think that perhaps I was prejudiced against them, and just to make sure I hired one or two. I found out that I was right. I have 75 men working under me, and you won't find a fat man among them. It stands to reason that a fat man couldn't be anything but lazy; and if he could, he certainly would be slow and ponderous. Give me a slim man for any kind of a position. He at least knows how to handle himself and keep out of the way. I like 'skinny' men, and the 'skinnier' they are the better I like them."

Another employer wouldn't think of employing a man with gray eyes. He admits that his suspicion may not be well founded, but insists that he couldn't bring himself to trust a man with gray eyes, and on this account would not have him in his office.

This view of employers on the personal characteristics of men, in addition to presenting unmistakable evidence of eccentricity, are amusing. One man wouldn't hire a good-looking man because he is conceited; while another taboos extremely homely men on the ground that they are eyesores in an office. A blue-eyed man is branded as effeminate, while black eyes are declared to be suggestive of too much temper. Talkative men are a nuisance; men who do not talk are plotters, and inclined to be sullen. A man who hesitates before answering a question lacks decision of character; while another who talks back freely is "fresh," and likely to become tiresome. One employer with ten men under him couldn't be induced to consider an application for a position coming from a man who parts his hair in the "middle." He says it is an indication of weakness.—London Answers.

Eye Stimulation.

A French author is credited with the accidental discovery that eyes exhausted from writing may be rested by gazing a few minutes at bits of bright-colored silk. After experiment he wound his ink-well with a band of gay-colored silk, and now gets relief by glancing at this whenever he dips his pen into the ink.

COREA.

Was Formerly a Country in Which There Existed Three Kingdoms.

Old Corea, like Britain with England, Wales and Scotland, was a territory, inside of which were three kingdoms. These, says the New York Post, had a long history of intestine struggle and border wars, with alternating invasions or succor from China or Japan. In the old books they are called Kaokuli, Sinlo (Silla), and Peksi (Pak-je), the first and most warlike being in the north, the second in the southeast, and the third in the west of the peninsula. Silla, cultivating commerce and the arts of civilization, carried on trade even with the Arabs, in whose books the kingdom and its products are described. China made Silla its ally, and in a great invasion, 660 A. D., Chinese armies overran the peninsula, overthrew a dynasty nearly 700 years old and annexed Pak-je as a province of China. The victory was commemorated by uprearing a great stone ten feet high and seven feet wide, but the next year the son of the king raised the standard of revolt, and tumbled the big token of imperialism and conquest into the river which flowed past his father's capital. Four centuries later, during the great drought (1047-1084), the stone was exposed, and the people drew it to the bank, but did not set it up. Covered with the debris of eight centuries, it lay undisturbed until 1886, when Mr. Tong, then secretary of the Chinese legation in Seoul, and now Taotai of Tientsin, journeyed to Pu-yu and had excavations made at the spot indicated. After 18 feet of earth had been removed he struck and uncovered the prostrate stone. Clearing off the surface, he first took a careful rubbing, which is reproduced word for word in the Corea Review for May, 1902, and made preparations to remove the stone. Unfortunately, that night a terrible storm of wind and rain, which unroofed houses, swept away scores of dwellings and caused loss of life by the river flood, roused the superstitious fears of the people. Thinking the spirits were angry, they filled up the pit. In substance, the text, after the usual fulsome compliments to the Chinese emperor and his generals, praises the "benevolent assimilation," and declares that the king, crown prince, 13 ministers and 700 courtiers were carried to China, while five Chinese generals or military governors were left to administer the seven districts (250 prefectures), which, according to the text, had a population of 6,100,000.

No Occasion for Hilarity Over Appearance of Baby's First Tooth.

"George," exclaimed Mrs. Young-husband, with a radiant smile, "baby has a tooth."

"Has he?" was the response, in a tone which betrayed no emotion.

"You don't seem surprised."

"I'm not surprised. All babies have first teeth. If our didn't have any I'd manage to work up some excitement, perhaps."

"I thought you'd be ever so pleased and happy about it."

"No; I don't see that it's any occasion for especial congratulation. The baby has my deepest sympathy."

"What for?"

"For having the first tooth. He has just struck the opening chapter of a long story of trouble. Pretty soon he'll have other teeth."

"Of course he will."

"Every one he cuts will hurt him. Then his second teeth will come and push these out. That will hurt him again. Some of the new ones will grow crooked, likely as not, and he will have to go to the dentist and have instruments adjusted to them to pull them into line. Then he'll cut his wisdom teeth. They will hurt a lot. After that he'll have to go to the dentist and let him drill holes and hammer until his face feels like a great palpitating stone quarry. I shouldn't like him to go through life without teeth. But I must say that I don't see any occasion for the customary hilarity over an event that means so much in the way of sorrow and humiliation."—London Tit-Bits.

FACTS THAT STAGGER.

A Scientist's Reflections on the Grandeur of Minute Things.

"Speaking of small things," said the man who has a leaning toward scientific things, to a New Orleans Times-Democrat reporter, "do you know we never stop to think of the importance of the little things around us, and the poetry, and beauty, and grandeur of the wee things which enter into the composition of that great inscrutable and impenetrable bulk of things and laws we call nature. Hugo's stung man's vanity somewhat when he said rather tritely that the grub worm was of as much importance to nature in the furtherance of her plans as man was, but he announced a profound truth just the same. We speak flippantly of the atom, and the molecule, and the wee little things without ever thinking seriously about what we are saying. 'Man is an atom,' we will say, with a stretch of the fancy, and we will talk about molecules with the same indifference to the real meaning of the word. What is an atom? What is a molecule? Can the finite mind conceive of a thing, can it think of a thing so utterly small that it cannot be divided? It cannot. Yet we speak of these things with the same liberty and self-confidence we show when we speak of the towering hills or the broad, spreading oceans which divide the continents. It is one of the liberties of speech. Rather I should say it was a license greater than any poet yet hath claimed in chiming his rhymes from the lyre. Did you ever stop to think about the size of a molecule? By some process of reasoning, based upon investigation and experiment, scientists have reached the conclusion that a molecule of glass is less than 1-25,000,000th, and something more than 1-250,000,000th of an inch in diameter. Put in different terms, it is less than 1-1,000,000th, and more than 1-10,000,000th of a millimeter in size. If we could take a drop of water and magnify it until it was the size of the earth in appearance, a molecule would be about the size of a leaden shot or a cricket ball. This will give us some idea of the molecule, which, for some purposes at least, is supposed to be made up of a number of atoms. The chemist, for instance, assumes that the atom is the smallest possible particle, and while not necessarily indivisible, is supposed to be so generally. Suppose we look at the molecule from another standpoint, from the standpoint of its velocity. It is estimated that the speed of the average molecule in a mass of hydrogen at the freezing point of water is about 6,000 feet per second, or about 70 miles a minute. This means 1,200 miles an hour, or about three times the speed of a common ball shot from the heaviest gun. It is estimated that at atmospheric pressure space filled with these particles would show collisions of molecule with molecule at a rate for each molecule of about 18,000,000,000 collisions per second. Rather rapid going, isn't it? However, molecules under certain other more normal conditions show a velocity of about 1,000 miles an hour, which is not a slow pace. There is a certain grandeur about these small things which almost staggers the mind when we think of them."

IT BEGAN WELL, BUT—

Two Men Who Believed in Courtesy for Strangers Only.

They bumped into each other in the street, and both started to do the polite thing. "I beg your pardon," said the first. "And I beg yours," replied the second. "It was unintentional, I assure you." "And I beg you to believe it was purely accidental on my part." "I trust you have taken no offense?" "None at all, and permit me to feel that—"

"Oh, certainly. Beautiful day?" "Positively splendid." "Ever see nicer spring weather?" "Never."

"Why, by George, but you are Andy Slaters!" exclaimed the first, in tones of contempt. "And you are Dick McQuirk!" replied the second, as he backed off. "And I was addressing you as a gentleman!" "And I thought you were one!" "Yah!" "Yah!"—London Tit-Bits.

THE STOLEN BRIDE.

Joke Perpetrated on a Wedding Party Over a Century Ago.

"Used as a tavern in revolutionary days, and the scene of the oft-told frolic of 'The Stolen Bride' in 1771, an old wooden building located high on the hills above the small village of Northfield, Conn., is being reduced to kindling wood," says the New York World. The building, which was one of the oldest landmarks in the state, was erected 135 years ago to serve the public on the stage route between Hartford and Litchfield.

Later it was a residence, and still later the Episcopal manse of Northfield.

The tavern acquired a wide notoriety in the fall of 1771, when the bride of Maj. Moses Seymour, an ancestor of Gov. Horatio Seymour, of New York, and Judge Origen S. Seymour, chief justice of the supreme court of Connecticut, was brought there on horseback and was secreted within the walls for hours.

On the day of the abduction Miss Marsh, the accomplished daughter of Col. and Mrs. Ebenezer Marsh, had been pronounced the bride of Maj. Seymour, at the home of her parents in Litchfield. Toward twilight there was a rap at the door of the Marsh house, to which the bride responded.

As she did so a man, whose face, except the eyes, was covered with a handkerchief, seized her, mounted with his fair burden a horse standing in front of the house, and rode away. "You will find us at the tavern," cried the kidnaper, as he galloped out of sight with the bride.

Horses were immediately hitched, and in a few moments the anxious bridegroom, the bride's parents, and the small party of guests were in pursuit.

A six-mile drive brought them to the tavern, which was in total darkness. As the bridegroom pulled the doorbell, lights inside revealed the stolen bride amidst a gathering of friends. The bridal couple were then reunited and asked to sit down to a bountiful collation, secretly arranged between the kidnapers and the hotel proprietor.

MISS SUSAN QUAY.

Miss Susan Quay, who will act as sponsor for the new worship, Pennsylvania, in the forthcoming temple of Genoa, Miss Susan Quay, 250, made her debut in Washington in 1886, and returned to her native country in the company of the artist. The original opera which Miss Quay will back the theatrical party of Genoa will be the Italian opera in the American version and will be one of the grandest things of the kind. The launching will shortly take place at the University of the Grange at Philadelphia with very elaborate ceremonies.

KING GEORGE OF SAXONY.

Prince George, who by the death of the late King Albert, has succeeded to the throne of Saxony, is the brother of the emperor, and will be 27 years old on August 1st. He was born in 1852, and was educated with 12 years in addition to that of George, by which he has been distinguished since his childhood. The new king is the father of Prince Frederick, who is now in Berlin, and is expected to be crowned in 1902. Prince George, who was formerly a lieutenant, has been promoted to the rank of major. His wife, Princess Maria, daughter of the late King of Portugal.
