CAPTURE THIEVES

Two Boys (Brothers) are Taken at Kirkland

On Wednesday morning the village marshall of Kirkland, George L. Buxton, was called to the store of D. Turner, which had been broken into and robbed.

After quite a chase through the forest and a swim across the river the two boys were captured and brought back to Kirkland. They were held over to the grand jury by Police Magistrate Milo Burnham and were brought to the county jail Friday by Marshall Buxton.

State's Attorney Poust interviewed them at once at the county jail and obtained from them the following confession: They are brothers named John and Edward Smith. They are both about 17 years of age and formerly lived at Pittsburgh, Pa. Their parents are dead and they lived with their uncle until about three weeks ago, when they claim he gave them each $25 and left for Germany with his family.

They arrived at Kirkland Tuesday night on a freight train and went over to the roundhouse, where they hid until morning. Toward morning they woke up cold, and being hungry proceeded to help themselves by cutting a hole in the window of the grocery store of D. Turner and then reaching in and turning the lock.

They went into the store, where they found a bag, and proceeded to load up supplies. They took about 25 cans of salmon, etc., flashlights, batteries, shoes, trousers, and a lot of jewelry. They claim they were told by a bum that if they got a chance to get some jewelry to like it as they could sell anything like that in the lumber camps and make a lot of money.

They carried all of the stuff in a bag and basket and made their way back to an old deserted shack near the round house, where they stayed until Friday morning, when they tried to make their getaway and were captured after a wild chase.

Marshall Buxton ordered them to stop when they began to run and shot at them. Edward hid behind a tree but the other one, John, made for the river and swam across, where he was captured. They stated they had made up between them that if they got into trouble they would give the name of Harris, which they did. However, it was not long before the state's attorney made them come out with the truth.

THE BUBBLE BURSTS

McHenry County Good Road Boosters Defeated at Polls

By a vote of almost three to one, McHenry county voted down the special $147,000 annual tax for good roads at the balloting held in connection with the judicial election in the county Monday.

The vote practically kills all county road building projects for the next year, although it has no effect on state and federal roads.

The result of the vote proved a surprise to Kane county good road boosters who have been aiding in the campaign in the northern county.

A SENSIBLE PLAN

The DeKalb-Sycamore Electric Co.'s cars now stop at the Ward House corner in Sycamore instead of running to the former terminal in front of the court house. It is said that lack of proper support for the trolley wires in the business center is the reason given.

At DeKalb the company has arranged with the city council to stop all cars at the corner when Lincoln Highway is reached on Wednesday and Saturday nights after six o'clock. The reason given is that traffic on that narrow street is so congested that at those times it is dangerous to run the cars on the street.

TRAINOR'S BONDS ARE FORFEITED

Notorious Bandit Fails to Report on Designated Day

ACTION PREDICTED BY ATTORNEY

He, With Three Others, was Implicated in Somonauk Garage Robbery

John B. Trainor, safe blower and burglar, arrested by a posse of farmers near Kanville in September, 1919, and sent to Joliet penitentiary on a charge of robbing a garage at Somonauk, evidently had no intention of going back to prison when he was released under a $5,000 bond last November, pending his appeal to the supreme court. The prison sentence imposed on him by jury in the DeKalb county court at Sycamore was affirmed by the higher court the first week in April, but Trainor has disappeared and his bond will be declared forfeited Monday.

After he had started serving an indeterminate sentence of from one to 14 years in prison with his three companions in the Somonauk robbery, Harold Tooney, Frank Krueger and Joseph Wheeler, Trainor instructed his attorney to take his case to the supreme court on a writ of error. When the appeal was filed the supreme court ordered Trainor released on a writ of error pending the decision. Albert Green of Chicago furnished a $5,000 bond.

The day Trainor started to leave the prison federal agents were waiting in the warden's office to arrest him on a charge of robbing a post-office in Kentucky several years ago. Trainor, rather than surrender to the federal authorities, went back to his cell, but several days later the supreme court held that the government could not arrest him on the old charge until after his release on the Somonauk charge. Green then fled the bond with Warden Murphy and Trainor walked out of prison.

"He'll never come back," former State's Attorney Lowell Smith of DeKalb county said when Trainor was released.

The supreme court handed down the decision confirming Trainor's conviction April 14. Trainor was supposed to surrender within three days after the decision, but he is still missing. Chicago police and federal authorities throughout the country are hunting for him, but not a trace has been found of him.

Trainor evaded government service men detailed to arrest him for post-office robberies for several years by posing as an English count. He was popular at afternoon dances and tea parties in Chicago hotels. At night he was a safe blower and burglar. When he was arrested for the Somonauk robbery after a gun battle with the Kaneville farmers, the Aurora police found a bottle of hair dye in his pocket. He was wearing silk underwear.

"Trainor will never go back to the penitentiary until he is caught and taken back," State's Attorney Poust of DeKalb said. "He has probably disguised himself again. The Chicago police and federal authorities have searched all of his old haunts in Chicago, but he hasn't been found. His bond will be declared forfeited Monday. There is a question in my mind whether the bond is any good.

Trainor, Krueger, Tooney and Wheeler, the latter 70 years old, robbed a garage in Somonauk in September, 1919. They were chased across two counties by DeKalb county police, who finally caught them in front of a garage in Kanville. The bandits opened fire and fled across the country to a grove, where they fought a gun battle with farmers armed with shotguns. Trainor and Wheeler were wounded and taken to the St. Charles hospital in Aurora. After their arrest Trainor, who then gave the name of John Hunt, was identified as the notorious postoffice robber and safe blower the federal authorities had been hunting.

MARRIED TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

Mr. and Mrs. Otto Peterson were very pleasantly surprised Monday evening, in their home southeast of town. MOTOR CLUB MEETING

Subject of Road Improvement to be Taken Up Again

There will be a meeting of the Genoa Good Roads and Motor Club on Friday evening of next week, to which every person interested is invited. There are many who have not become members and they should avail themselves of this opportunity to get in touch with the live wires of the community. Watch for full particulars of the meeting in the next issue.

The club will soon put up sign boards at the city limits on all four roads leading into Genoa. As the motorist drives into Genoa he will be greeted with these words "Welcome to Genoa—Genoa Good Roads and Motor Club." As the same motorist leaves Genoa at the city limits he will read on the reverse side of the sign board these words: "Thank You, Call Again—Genoa Good Roads and Motor Club."

Genoa has the best streets in the country and the highways leading into the streets are the best anywhere. We want the tourist to know that this is Genoa. When one approaches Sycamore or DeKalb, he knows just where he is without a guiding sign, for the highways are a disgrace to any community.

The happy couple, accompanied by friends, motored to DeKalb, and there boarded a train for Marion, O., where they will pass a month.

Traveling Salesman Walks Into Locomotive, Head-on

Oliver E. White, traveling salesman for the Rathbone-Sard company at Aurora, who was injured, when struck at the North Western station Saturday at DeKalb, Saturday noon, died about 4:15 in the afternoon.

Mr. White was walking along the station platform Saturday noon as train No. 19 was arriving from the east. With two grips Mr. White walked with his head down, apparently thinking of something else. The cylinder box on the engine first struck him in the head, knocking him to the cement sidewalk. It is believed that the fall to the sidewalk also caused a fracture of the skull.

The End of a Perfect Day

"I bought this at a sale," she says, unwrapping a bottle labelled "Pure Cider Vinegar." "It isn't cider vinegar. I don't know what it is, but it tastes like poison."

"I'll have it analyzed," says J. C. McLaughlin, Superintendent of the Division.

He does. It is some chemical concoction that, if not exactly poisonous, might easily be harmful in any considerable quantity. The "sale" ends abruptly. What is left in stock is ordered destroyed, and as much as possible of what has been sold is traced and the purchasers warned.

"They're selling this pretty cheap at Blank's. I didn't like the looks of it," says an inspector, bringing in a package of dried fish.

It is sent to the laboratory. Translated out of scientific language, "stiff with preservatives. Unfit for human food," is the chemist's report.

The inspector hurries back to the store, but Blank's has been hurrying too, and the fish is being loaded onto a truck.

"If it's questionable, we don't want to sell it," the manager declares. "We're sending it back to the firm we bought it from."

"All right, but tell them not to try selling it again. Not in Illinois. We shall keep an eye on it," he is told.

"So-and-so is taking a consignment of eggs out of cold-storage today." The Division consults its books, where every such consignment of foodstuffs is recorded.

"They've been in there almost up to the time limit. Better look'em over." The inspector sees that they are properly candled and comes back. "Most of them all right. A few under-grade."

The first, marked plainly, "Cold Storage," may be sold. The others are destroyed or used for something else than human food.

M. E. CHURCH NOTES

Children's Day Program Next Sunday Morning at Ten

We have reached the time of year when a great many people begin to slacken in their religious fervor and their attendance at the services of the church. The pastor urges each and every one to redouble efforts and not neglect their privilege and duty during the summer months. If the weather is warm, it is just as warm for the preacher. If you expect your pastor to be at church on the hot Sunday, why should you not be there? Have you stopped to consider the silent eloquence of the empty pew? It speaks of your duty and privilege to share with us the inspiration and delight of the church service.

Our Sunday school is growing in interest. The lessons are very interesting and helpful. We have a place for you.

CLASS OF NINE FINISH COURSE

Commencement Exercises at the M. E. Church, Thursday Evening

ORATION BY L. O. ENGLEMAN

President E. E. Sandall Presents Diplomas—Pleasing Orations by Four

A class of nine completed the course of study in the Genoa Township High School last week and on Thursday evening received their diplomas. Commencement exercises were held at the M. E. church, the audience being well pleased with the program as a whole.

Mr. Engleman's subject "Building Your Own World" was opportune, the speaker conveying the idea that our world is just what we make, and it will be just as narrow or wide as the individual wills and prepares.

There were no long essays to tire the audience, but four of the class were selected to deliver three-minute orations. That they performed well was evidenced by the hearty applause and words of approval after the close of the program. These orations were delivered by Floyd Gustavison, Ruth Austin, Mabel Montgomery and Klea Schoonmaker.

The musical numbers were all excellent and elicited many favorable comments.

Before the diplomas were presented by president of the board of education, E. E. Sandall, Principal H. Mackenzie made a few announcements pertaining to the class standing as follows:

During the past year the following students have earned the highest standing in the classes: Seniors—1st, Mabel Montgomery and Klea Schoonmaker; 2nd, Ruth Austin.

Teachers Engaged

Practically all the teachers in both high and grade school have been engaged to return next year, this including Principal Mackenzie and Assistant Principal Moore.

Work on Building

Work on the new high building is progressing rapidly, there being about twenty men on the job. It is expected that the foundation walls will be finished this week. It is doubtful, however if the building will be ready for occupancy much before the holidays, as the finishing work usually takes considerable time.

Considering the disadvantages under which the principal and teachers have been compelled to work during the past three years. This is evidenced in the fact that the school is accredited with the State University, despite the inadequate quarters. When housed in the new building, Genoa High will take its place among the best in the state.

WHAT TO DO! WHAT TO DO!

Injunctions restraining State Auditor Russel and State Treasurer Miller from issuing warrants and making payments to counties under provisions of the Holiday road refund bill, now pending in the senate, were sought Friday by Harry M. McCaskrin of Rock Island, in suit filed in Sangamon county circuit court.

Representative Holaday, Republican floor leader, Representative Tice and E. Bradt, state superintendent of highways, were charged with a conspiracy in passage of a bill, which Representative McCaskrin declared illegal.

BASE BALL SUNDAY

The Old Rivals, Kirkland and Genoa, Will Meet on Local Diamond

Next Sunday on the local diamond, the old time rivals, Genoa and Kirkland will meet, the first time this season. This promises to be a real ball game, for the old rivalry still exists and both teams will be prepared to win. The Genoa Nationals will have a top-notch battery for the day and it goes without saying that the visitors will take no chances in bringing over an inferior team. The game will be called at 2:30.

The game last Sunday between Genoa and Burlington was a good exhibition, the locals losing 7 to 6. The tabulated score was turned in too late this week for publication.

LEGION MAN DISPLAYS NERVE

Airplane Fighter Taken to Coal Cars to Reach Vocational Training School.

There's no striking similarity between piloting a highly flying airplane of the Marine Corps to riding in the coal cars of a freight train.

But let us see these modes of travel, Thomas D. Lane, junior law student at the University of Kansas, will complete his education. Lane, a member of the American Legion at St. Paul, Minn., was attending school in the Kansas university when his money ran out. A letter forwarded to him from his native state told of the work of the Federal Board for Vocational Education in Minneapolis. Through disability incident to his service as a flyer, he was entitled to the Federal educational aid. Without sufficient funds to make the long trip, nevertheless he set out to appear before the board.

Three days in a box car, a coal gondola and the tenders of three passenger trains conveyed him to his destination. Several fast changes of cars, unusual maneuvers and debates with trainmen were necessary, but the aviator came through smiling. One mail clerk proved friendly, but that train was bound for Chicago. After two more trials he found a bunk on some coal and woke up the next morning in the St. Paul yards.

Placing his case before the board, he was classed "Section One," entitling him to tuition, supplies and training pay until he completes his course.

When an unexpected number of veterans enlisted for vocational training, Mr. Vernon appealed to 20,000 business men to place the men in their establishments. The merchants and manufacturers responded with a good will and all the vocational students were placed to good advantage.

MERITED TRIBUTE TO LEGION

Leslie's Weekly Editorially Honors Brave Men Who Served in the World War.

"The American Legion begins to look like a full-page composite photograph of biographic Americanism from Putnam to Pershing," reads a recent editorial in Leslie's Weekly. "It moves with the weight of the 'Battle Hymn of the Republic' and the levity of 'Yankee Doodle,' with a ululant yell from 'Dixie.' Its large composition is a token of great trust, and the old Roman legions, and other legions of the time, begin to look like pop-guns. It neither tries to roar with a lion's heart, nor win a woman's—quite different from the pomaded mustaches of Potsdam. Its manners are quiet; its memory is excellent; its emotions are strong, and it is prepared to roll up the refractory elements in one bundle and hang them on one hook."

MAKES DRIVE FOR AUXILIARY

President of Texas Organization Shows That She Comes From Fighting Stock.

A record for service to America that dates from Revolutionary days and includes the deeds of Nathaniel Green and Daniel Boone, is perpetuated in Mrs. E. Clinton Murray, of Houston, Tex., president of the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion of that state.

The first unit of the Auxiliary of the American Legion was founded there. When her husband, who was past the age limit, was accepted by the Medical Corps during the World War, Mrs. Murray likewise volunteered. She made a record of thirty addresses in one week during a Red Cross drive. She sold Liberty bonds, organized Red Cross units and did active canteen work.

The Women's Auxiliary was organized nationally in Austin, Tex., July 23, 1919. Mrs. Murray was one of the first women to organize a unit in Houston in March 1920. When she became state president, there were twenty-three units in the department. Under her direction, thirty additional units have been formed and fifty others are now organizing. Mrs. Murray plans to obtain a unit for each of the 291 posts of the Legion in Texas.

Mrs. Murray was born in Concordia Parish, La. Both her father and mother came of old Revolutionary stock. Her mother's paternal ancestor was a near kinsman of Daniel Boone; her father's paternal ancestor was a descendant of Nathaniel Greene. During the Civil War her father served as a captain of cavalry in Forrest's Brigade.

PAY TRIBUTE TO THEIR DEAD

Minnesota Legionnaires Pay Homage to Deceased Buddies Who Fought for Their Country.

In a little cemetery among the pines where sleep the members of his family at Cloquet, Minn., the body of John De Foe, the first Minnesota Indian soldier to die fighting for his country, was laid to rest. Carl Anderson post of the American Legion paid homage at his funeral.

Elsewhere through Minnesota, Legionnaires have been paying tribute to the funerals of their dead buddies, whose bodies are being returned from overseas.

"He was a clean-cut American, one of our very best, and his memory will be dear and sacred," said the commander of Winnebago post, at the funeral service of Private Vernon Bailey, in which fifty uniformed Legionnaires took part.

The body of Ralph Gracie, after whom Bemidji post is named, was buried at his home town with honors.

ADDS TO LEGION'S STRENGTH

Commander of Minnesota Department Has Way of Doing Things That Gets Results.

Under the direction of A. H. Vernon, commander of the Minnesota department of the American Legion, that state has become one of the strongest Legion departments in the country.

Commander Vernon's theory is that success comes to the Legion in proportion to the service it gives to its members and to the state. In carrying out this policy he has built up a Legion Service bureau which handles one thousand ex-service claims a month and a department branch of the American Legion News Service.

Early in 1921, when the Federal board for vocational education prepared to send representatives to sixteen centers in the state to examine disabled veterans, the authorities were handicapped by a lack of publicity. Commander Vernon prepared twenty thousand large posters and placed them on every billboard in the state. This was supplemented with information to every newspaper in regard to where every disabled man should report to receive compensation, vocational training and medical treatment.

When an unexpected number of veterans enlisted for vocational training, Mr. Vernon appealed to 20,000 business men to place the men in their establishments. The merchants and manufacturers responded with a good will and all the vocational students were placed to good advantage.

Democratic members of the foreign affairs committee at a meeting approved the principles of the Porter resolution by voting for a substitute offered by Representative Flood of Virginia, ranking Democratic member of the committee. The Flood substitute went further than the Porter proposal, however, by directing the President to call a disarmament conference.

The text of the Porter resolution as reported by the committee follows: "Resolved, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, that the congress hereby expresses its full concurrence in the declaration of the President in his address to congress on April 12, 1921, that 'we are ready to co-operate with other nations to approximate disarmament, but earnestly protest against any disarmament which would further reduce the burden of expenditures and the menace of war; and that for the expenses preliminary to and in connection with the holding of such conference the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the President, is hereby appropriated.'

EUROPE NO LONGER HUNGRY

Hoover Says Two-Thirds of Population Now Eating Regularly—Food for All.

Washington, June 8.—Europe is no longer going hungry. Authoritative advice to the Department of Commerce show that rationing has been abandoned in two-thirds of the total population and that it has been relaxed on many commodities among the remaining third, Secretary Hoover announced.

"With the forthcoming harvest," said Mr. Hoover, "it is expected that the economic recovery will have proceeded so far, both in local production and the ability to provide full amount of needed imports, that rationing can be abandoned in all countries, except possibly Austria."

In this event, he pointed out, Europe will have accomplished the first great fundamental step in recuperation.

London, June 8.—The immediate sending of additional troops to Ireland for the purpose of maintaining order has been decided upon, it was announced in the house of commons by Austen Chamberlain, the government leader. He made this statement in response to an inquiry.

Sir Hamar Greenwood, chief secretary for Ireland, replying to an inquiry as to the number of soldiers killed or wounded in the "war in Ireland" since January, 1920, said that 127 had been killed and 286 wounded.

SUBSTITUTE FOR BORAH MEASURE

New Disarmament Resolution by Chairman Porter Ordered Before House.

HAS APPROVAL OF PRESIDENT

Broadens the Scope of the Senate Amendment to Naval Bill—Includes Disarmament on Land as Well as on Sea.

Washington, June 8.—The house foreign affairs committee reported out the Porter disarmament resolution, despite warnings from senate disarmament advocates that adoption of the Porter proposal would tie up naval appropriation indefinitely.

The Porter resolution has the approval of President Harding and was endorsed by the Republican leaders of the house before it was presented.

It broadens the scope of the Borah disarmament amendment added to the naval bill in the senate by including disarmament on land as well as on sea and by including all big armament nations in the proposed conference.

The Porter resolution is opposed by Senator Borah and his associates in the disarmament group on the ground that it is not a definite step toward reduction of armaments. Under the provisions of the house measure congress would not direct or authorize the President to call an international conference on the subject, but simply would "concur" in any move he might make toward international disarmament.

Democratic members of the foreign affairs committee at a meeting approved the principles of the Porter resolution by voting for a substitute offered by Representative Flood of Virginia, ranking Democratic member of the committee. The Flood substitute went further than the Porter proposal, however, by directing the President to call a disarmament conference.

FATHER MORAN AIDS LEGION

Former Army Chaplain Assists in Obtaining Armistice Day Legislation in Minnesota.

When the Minnesota American Legion state legislative committee at the opening of the state legislature appointed sub-committees to pilot its various bills through the house and senate, Father D. J. Moran of Farmington, was made chairman of the Armistice day committee.

Attacking the job with Argonne fervor, Father Moran obtained the passage of a bill declaring Armistice day a legal holiday as the first piece of Legion legislation enacted into law.

As army chaplain, Father Moran served ten months overseas. He is an ardent Legion lecturer and worker. When he returned from France in September, 1919, and found no Legion post organized in Farmington, he headed straight for Legion state headquarters, obtained the necessary blanks and within a week had established one of the most active posts in Minnesota.

ANCIENT AND MODERN ROME

World-Famous Buildings Occupy Sacred Sites in the Old "Capital of the World."

Ancient Rome was built on the hills south of the River Tiber. Tradition regarded the Palatine as the site of Romulus' Urbs Quadrata. Excavations have brought to light remains of earlier settlement and a pre-historic necropolis. The capitoline was the center of republican and imperial Rome. One of the principal ancient monuments is Hadrian's mausoleum, which, as the castle of St. Angelo, was the citadel of medieval Rome. West of this stood Caligula's circus, in which Nero tortured the Christians; its site is now occupied by St. Peter's, the chief shrine of Roman Catholicism, reputed to be the largest church in the world, occupying 18,000 square yards and measuring 435 feet in its highest part. North of St. Peter's is the Vatican palace, which covers 1 1/2 acres and comprises over 1,000 halls, chapels and rooms. The pantheon, built by Agrippa in 27 B. C. and restored by Hadrian, is said to be the best-preserved ancient building in the city.

BIRDS AS STREET CLEANERS Vultures Employed for the Purpose in Costa Rica, and Traveler Says They Are Efficient.

Garbage collectors in Costa Rica enjoy their occupation, because they eat what they find. In his book, "Sailing South," Philip S. Marden writes as follows: "I was awakened on the first morning in town by a sound of wheels in the street below, and looked out. It was an impressive sight. The garbage man was abroad on his scavenging rounds. Ahead of his open wagon walked in a sober platoon four enormous vultures, all in sable and maintaining the chastened demeanor of undertakers at an open grave. Behind the wagon walked half a dozen other vultures similarly sedate. And around the rim of the cart, perched in solemn row, sat twenty-one other birds of the same species and same somber hue. I would fain have immortalized the scene, but the camera, alas, wasn't loaded. I began to understand why the streets of San Jose, which leave much to be desired in other respects, are at least so notably clean. The buzzards attend to that!"

When purchasing linoleum for the floor it is a good idea to order a lining of felt. This precaution will probably prolong the use of the linoleum. It also deadens sound and makes the floor warmer in winter. It prevents the linoleum from expanding or contracting and it gives a softer tread, all advantages worth considering.

CHURCH A REFUGE

Pews of London Edifice Made In- to Sleeping Places.

All Who Faced Night in the Streets Made Welcome at Old St. Martin's-in-the-Fields.

St. Martin's-in-the-Fields—always during the last war years, and now, a place of midnight shelter for people stranded in London streets—was a haven to some of the mothers who had come from distant towns to attend the ceremonies in memory of the unknown soldier dead, and to soldiers who otherwise must have tramped the streets, says a writer in the Manchester Guardian.

Long before midnight they began to come. In the light of the flickering candles on the white altar and the few lights shining on the white ceiling of the gallery one saw two or three well-dressed women sitting in the pews on one side and two or three men on the other, and wondered whether it were worth while keeping the church open and two policewomen in attendance for so few wanderers. But the sound of heavy breathing, so loud in the silence, did not come from them, nor was the lad in khaki who lay asleep in the bottom of a pew, his head resting on a hassock, responsible.

Tiptoeing down the long aisle to the end, where a man knelt in prayer before the wreath of palms entwined with crimson ribbon, which was to go to the cenotaph, one found that there were sleepers on the seats of nearly every pew. Occasionally they wakened and peered sleepily over the back of the pews as a newcomer entered. Then they sank to rest again, while the stranger, after a few hesitant minutes sitting bolt upright as if at a service, disappeared from sight and soon was fast asleep.

The policewomen kept unobtrusive watch. Where they saw a man sleeping on the floor they woke him, reminding him that he must lie on the seat. The man in shirtsleeves was told to put on his coat; the man who for a second time had disregarded the order to put on his boots and who had rolled under the seat had to leave the church. The discipline of the shelter is slight, but it must be obeyed.

After midnight a young woman from Lancashire came in, carrying a heavy child. She said that all day she had sought in vain for lodgings. No one would take her in because of the baby, and at last a kindly policeman had sent her here. As she sat there holding the child her shoulders moved uneasily. One saw that she had come to the end of her endurance, and a policewoman, folding a thick coat, made up a bed on the pew for the preternaturally well-behaved child. Then the mother went to sleep, secure of shelter till five in the morning, when the waiting rooms at Charing Cross would be open to her. The older women, the mothers of soldiers, glanced around from time to time, but were evidently determined not to yield to their fatigue. They would sit the night through. The rules are simple. People are allowed to make use of the church for one night. In case of emergency a second visit may be allowed, but no more.

Buckwheat and Cakes.

Even though there is great satisfaction at the breaking of five crop records in the United States this year, many an American must heave a sigh as he reads that the buckwheat crop has never exceeded the production of 1888, and that this season it is 8,000,000 bushels below the top yield of that year. Who does not know that the decline of the buckwheat cake as the backbone of a hearty breakfast is the cause of the falling off?

The buckwheat cake was once an American institution. It followed the pioneer from the Atlantic coast into the depths of the Middle West. Its allies were home-made sausages and sugar-house syrup. It held the lines from early November until the sap began to run in the spring. Then there followed plentiful doses of sulphur and molasses to rid the blood of impurities supposed to be the result of buckwheat's heating qualities. But who cared? Wasn't the kind of cakes that mother used to bake on the soapstone griddle worth even such a price?—Providence Journal.

Catch Salmon at Sea.

Fishing for salmon is prohibited at the present time in nearly all the rivers of Alaska and altogether in the southeastern part of the territory. Meanwhile the fishery goes on; but it is a marine fishery. The salmon are caught on their feeding grounds out at sea with purse seines, gill nets, floating traps and fish lines. Trolling for salmon is great sport and is particularly fine off the straits of San Juan de Fuca. Unfortunately, very many of the salmon captured at sea are not yet full grown. That they should be taken before they are mature means fewer to run up the rivers to spawn in coming years. It helps to make the outlook for the future of the fishery a bad one.

Electricity on Farms.

Out of 8,802,502 farms in the United States, only 940,000, or 5.3 per cent, are electrically equipped, according to government census figures. More than 42,000,000 people live on these farms, indicating that farming folk constitute almost one-third of the population of the nation.

WAIL IS OLD ONE

Complaint About H. C. L. Has Been Heard for Ages.

At Least Eighteen Hundred Years Ago the Natives of Egypt "Kicked" on Prices of Food.

It is interesting to learn from a papyrus in the museum of the University of Pennsylvania, by which institution many important archeological finds have been made in the old world, that the high cost of living and excessive freight rates were issued at least 1,800 years ago, and it is a peculiar coincidence that the complaint arose in Theadelphia, a name closely allied to that of Philadelphia, which, like other American cities, has been wrestling with the cost of food and the rates on anthracite coal.

It seems as if there is nothing new under the sun; that the same issues prevail, and that the same struggle is being waged.

However, it seems certain that we ourselves are much better off than the fellahs of Egypt in the apostolic age, or even than the small landed proprietors, who had to pay as much freight "as the traffic would bear" for transportation on the Nile.

We get a glimpse of life under the Ptolemies in Egypt, when the country was drained to furnish Rome with food. It is an amazing thing that in the Fayoum district, which is a little pocket at the westward of the Nile, films records on papyrus should have been preserved to this day. This is only possible in a land of perpetual dryness. Egypt has thriven without rain through ten millenniums, because the necessary water comes not from the skies, but along the Nile from the center of Africa.

Eight centuries may seem a long time to us, but at the time the complaint of freight rates was mentioned there had been at least 5,000 years of recorded history in Egypt, and undoubtedly many millenniums which have left no record.

The poor fellahs, the actual cultivator of the soil, comprised a sort of patient animal who had become inured to oppression and greed and who never had the slightest opportunity for self-development until within the period embracing the last 90 years, when the British government set him on his feet and gave him not only freedom from lashings by the court-bash, from compulsory labor on the ditches, from extra taxation, but permitted him to accumulate a little something on his own account and to become more than a tool of the officials.—Detroit Sunday News.

THEIR LAST FEAST

Mohammedan Fanatics Paid Dearly for "Brain Stew."

Excess of Zeal Discouraged by French Authorities in Northern Senegal in Effective Manner.

Boomba is not the seat of Mohammedan culture in Africa. Boomba lies in northern Senegal, behind the west coast of Africa, humiliated at the onward strides of Dakkar, a worldly seaport knowing neither religion nor shame. And let it be known to all men that the natives in the hinterland nigh unto Boomba are as the "wee sma' hours of the mornin'," in blackest darkness; but seeking the light of a great awakening.

Last month, while the Clontarf, stout shipping-board vessel, now at pier 23, foot of Pacific street, lay to in the roadstead at Dakkar, a wave of revival hit the vicinity of Boomba, according to the assistant engineer.

The blacks got religion and the blacklands resounded with the chant of "There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his prophet"—in fervent Senegalese.

Now, the German found the Senegalese a ferocious soldier. On his native jungle trail he is even more so. On the warpath went the newly converted Mohammedans, with fire in one hand and the sword in the other, after the fashion of Saladdin's host. They were bound to out-Mohammed Mohammed and great was their zeal. Furthermore, they were bound on a quest to show their brethren, unbelieving dogs on the docks of Dakkar, that a warrior of the jungles could acquire that polish which some say comes only to citizens of the worldly state, dwelling in a great metropolis.

There chanced across their march a party of Frenchmen, hunting wild beasts of the field. The Frenchmen were, moreover, unbelieving dogs. The slaughter was swift, pitiless and almost painless. Eleven dead Gauls were laid at the feet of the chief of the Boomba hinterland.

"My children," cried he, in a rolling brogue such as is bandied about in the jungle, "behold these men of culture and little faith. They have the wisdom of them who sit in high places, but they have the faith of the groveling jackal. We have done well to chop off their heads. Now we will do well to acquire their wisdom. Let us have brain stew, made from the brains of the Frenchmen, in whom there was wisdom but little faith."

And so the stew was eaten. About a week later, a dozen of these fierce seekers after a great wisdom were gathered in by the French authorities. And in another week they were sent to another land, far beyond the clouds, where the hours tread the mazes of the heavenly dance and wisdom comes to all men who are true believers. At least, that is the tale as told by the assistant engineer. And thus endeth the quest of the converts of the Boomba hinterland, searchers of wisdom in the name of the prophet.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The World's Advancement. Those who, in retrospect, recall the days of the hand sickle may well marvel at the developments which have taken place within their recollection. They have seen, besides the development in agriculture, the inauguration of almost countless devices and utilities. They have seen railroads built across the continent, the telegraph and telephone perfected, great steamship lines established and more latterly the motor car and the airplane utilized in everyday affairs. Until the hand sickle was laid aside it had been used since that time to which the memory of men runneth not to the contrary. And yet to them, it may seem the advent of the grain cradle and the crude horse-drawn reaper was but as yesterday. Personified, those homely early devices seem almost like the explorers of the earlier ages who set out upon voyages of discovery with nothing to guide them but a vision of something grander and more beautiful than their eyes had ever beheld.—Exchange.

New Discoveries in Crete. Excavations at Knossos, Pssetos and other sites in Crete have not merely established the existence of a people whose form of civilization was the earliest in Europe, but have shown much about their daily life, games, amusements; their art, religion, writing—though hardly yet their language; their physical characteristics, dress and the houses they live in. A huge palace, as big as Buckingham palace, has been unearthed at Knossos. It has a drainage system that an eminent Italian archeologist has described as "absolutely English," and that certainly anticipates the hydraulic engineering of the Nineteenth century. The men of science engaged in the work estimate the age of their discoveries at four thousand years.—Discoveries.

Dehydrated Fish Valuable. Electrical dehydrating plants for fish are promised as a result of recent experiments in England, which demonstrate that it is possible with the aid of heated air to accomplish in a brief time results that now require many days of air curing, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Deprived of every trace of moisture, the fish meat may be kept for years, and then restored for three days in water. The dried flesh also may be ground into a fine flour of high food value. The process has been patented in all countries.

LAUGHED AT SEAL

"Hell-Diver" Refused to Figure on Pursuer's Menu.

Curious Speed Contest Reported by Nature Student, Who Witnessed the Incident, on Maine Coast.

Seals are quick of movement, and anyone who has ever watched them feeding cannot but marvel at the speed with which they dart about in the water and the apparent ease with which they are able to overtake their prey, says a Bulletin of the American Game Protective Association, and likewise there are few duck hunters who have not had the opportunity of witnessing the speed of the grebe, commonly known as the hell-diver. He can easily protect himself by diving and swimming under water, and "lightning" is slow as compared with the speed with which a hell-diver submerges when he sees the flash of a gun headed in his direction."

Which of the two is quicker in the water becomes a nice question, to the discussion of which Arthur L. Penniman contributes the story of a contest he witnessed on the Maine coast, in the Penobscot bay region, between a seal and a pied-billed grebe, when each contestant was apparently doing his best, "the seal looking for his supper and the hell-diver intent on seeing that he didn't make up the menu."

"While we were engaged in studying the habits of a fish hawk," Mr. Penniman writes, "our attention was attracted by a great commotion in the water off shore. From our blind we could see that the splashing was caused by a seal performing the most curious antics in his attempts to catch a bird which we later identified as a pied-billed grebe."

"The seal made rapid progress, porpoising in and out of the water in quick diving leaps and was fast overhauling the bird, which was swimming frantically to escape his pursuer, but, however, made no attempt to fly. After a straight-away race of some fifty yards or more, it seemed as if the chase was over, as both bird and seal disappeared in the same splash as the seal struck the water. When the splash subsided we saw that the grebe had cleverly dodged to one side and, after twisting and turning quickly around a very small circuit to elude the seal, he headed straight for shore."

"The bird now began to use its wings, and, skittering rapidly over the water, soon distanced the seal, which continued the chase until within 30 feet of the beach, where the water was no more than knee deep. "There he sat with his shoulders out of the water, watching the grebe as the latter ran along the edge of the shore. Then, as though he hated to give up his meal, he slowly pursued the bird on a parallel course in the water, paying not the slightest attention to the men on the beach until he was frightened off by our intervention in the contest."

Developing Guatemala. President Herrera of Guatemala, has undertaken to interest foreign capital in the development of some 15,000 square miles of unexploited territory in Guatemala which still awaits the hand of the pioneer and the invader to transform it into productive fields. As the first step he has created a new department of agriculture with a minister in his cabinet and has appointed as head of this department Antonio Bouscayol.

Both the president and the new minister have devoted the main part of their lives to agricultural development and are therefore keenly interested in providing encouragement to the farmers and planters. Both realize foreign investment must be encouraged to accomplish this end and believe that such aid must be expected as a result of diffusion of the knowledge that Guatemala has a safe and sane government, is a fit place to live in and has much territory as yet undeveloped.

No Two Snowflakes Alike. For 35 years Wilson Alwyn Bentley of Jericho, Vt., has been studying snowflakes. In that time he has made 3,800 photomicrographs of snowflakes and has found that no two of them are exactly alike. As a result of his exhaustive study he firmly believes that the snowflake is the most exquisite example of nature's art.

His photographs have been introduced into several universities, and have also won a niche in the arts and sciences, as well as being used for designs in aircraft shops and for jewelry designing.

Task for Chemists. The technical chemists of the world are asked to solve a very tempting puzzle. They are told that if they can only discover how to get it out, there is to be had from Jerusalem artichokes a substance which can be turned into a sugar sweeter than cane sugar. The yield per acre of artichokes would be higher than the yield of beet sugar per acre of beet, and higher than the average yield of cane sugar per acre of cane. Truly an alluring bait, and an opportunity to make the land flow with honey, at any rate with something not unlike it.

Wheat and the Consumer. "The mills of the gods grind slowly," remarked the ready-made philosopher "Yes," replied Farmer Cornstossel "I reckon if we had to depend on them, the price of flour never would come down."

Danger in Unclean Dishes. Just how serious is the danger of infection from imperfectly washed dishes in eating places has not been determined, but the high count of bacteria left upon restaurant utensils suggests unpleasant possibilities. In the investigation of Roy S. Dearstyne, health official of Charlotte, N. C., the utensils were from six eating houses, of which one used a modern electric dishwasher. The bacteria on hand-washed coffee mugs from different lunch rooms ranged from 26,000 to 280,000; on water glasses, 23,000 to 180,000; spoons, 3,400 to 70,000; knives, 1,500 to 20,000; forks, 1,500 to 11,000. With the clean machine washing, the coffee mugs had 3,800 bacteria, no other utensils more than 2,000.

Killing Weeds With Paper. The apparent success of the Eckart process in cultivating sugar cane has been the subject of much discussion, according to the Tech Engineering News, since experiments on large areas have indicated that the cost of growing the cane can be reduced from 50 to 70 per cent and the crop increased by ten tons an acre, which is equivalent to one ton of raw sugar. After the field has been planted it is covered with a peculiar asphalt paper that will withstand six weeks of weather and that at the same time is soft enough to allow the sharp growing points of the sugar cane to break through. The cane grows more vigorously and the weed seeds sprout at once, but the weeds are quickly blanching and withered by the black covering. The paper is made by cooking pulp for 12 hours with lime under pressure and then after a few days running it out on the paper machine and treating it with asphalt.—Youth's Companion.

Death to Rats.
A study of barium carbonate as a rat poison, made by the United States Department of Agriculture, indicates that a 20 per cent mixture with food makes a satisfactory bait. With this percentage a rat ordinarily needs to eat only one-third or three-eighths of a meal of average size to get a fatal dose. It was found that with this dose many of the rats poisoned died within 24 hours, though an occasional rat was found which survived an even larger amount, thus indicating that 100 per cent mortality is not to be expected in any case. A summary of results of experiments conducted by various persons with a view to determining the deadliness of barium to different animals shows the fallacy of the assumption that barium is poisonous only to rats. It is pointed out that the fatal dose of barium per pound tends to decrease relatively as the size of the animal increases, and that a bait calculated to be fatal to rats may be assumed to be more or less dangerous to small domestic animals also.

Phillip's Wish.
Phillip, Jr., two and one-half years old, is very fond of having his mother sing to him as she rocks him to sleep. She has told him a number of Bible stories, the usual number of "Mother Goose" stories, and other stories so dear to children. He often requests her to sing about "Mother Hubbard," of "Jack Spratt," or some other equally well-known character, and she willingly obliges, "filling in," as she goes along, to suit the occasion. The other evening she had been singing to him about "Santa Claus" and his various activities, and, seeing that Phillip was almost asleep, stopped to rest. Suddenly he opened his eyes and said: "Mother, sing me a song about Moses, and Mutt and Jeff."

Farmers State Bank
A PROGRESSIVE STATE BANK

Your Farm is Your Factory

Perhaps you never thought of it in just that way, but farming is a great manufacturing business and your farm is a factory in the true meaning of the word.

The factory manager overhauls his plant every so often to make sure that it will run properly and produce the most woods at the least cost. In just the same way, the farmer checks up his buildings and equipment, makes those little repairs which save big repairs later on, and builds whatever buildings he needs to help produce more crops with less labor and expense.

Lumber prices are back to normal. No longer need you postpone building on account of high prices of lumber. Now is a good time to build that new barn you have been wanting for several years and to make other improvements. Begin now and get them done before harvesting commences.

Here in our business we are trying to do our part in bringing conditions back where they should be. Our years of business experience, our building plans and ideas, and our friendly, sincere counsel and assistance are at your service for the asking, with no obligation of course.

Let's talk it over the first convenient day.

ANOTHER AUTO VICTIM

DeKalb Has Second Tragedy Within A Week

Mrs. A. H. Kylen of DeKalb was struck by the S. L. Anderson car, driven by Stuart Anderson at the intersection of North and Fourth street in that city Friday afternoon. First examination by attending surgeons disclosed a fracture of the skull. Drs. S. L. Anderson, J. S. Rankin, and J. P. Kane were hastily summoned to the Carlson home nearby where the injured woman was taken when she fell.

According to the story told by Mrs. Anderson, her son, Stuart, was driving north on Fourth street, and Mrs. Kylen had just crossed a part of Fourth street on the diagonal, when she saw the Anderson car approaching. According to one or two witnesses who saw the accident, the Anderson car was not going at a rate of speed in excess of 15 or 18 miles an hour.

Mrs. Kylen, it is said, attempted to cross ahead of the Anderson car, and the driver had made the turn to the opposite side of the street to avoid striking her. Mrs. Kylen evidently became confused and stepped back and was struck by the fender of the car, as it again swerved to avoid hitting her. It was not believed the wheel of the car ran over her body.

BOOZE CAUSED DEATH

Marengo Corner's Jury Places Blame at Barclaycorn's Door

Oscar Sandman, driver of the car in which John W. Arlington was riding when he came to his death in an accident on the Coral road, was under the influence of liquor when the accident occurred, a jury of Deputy Coroner Eshbaugh of Marengo has found.

The verdict of the jury after hearing evidence of Don Loomis, who was severely injured in the accident, was as follows:

"In the matter of the inquisition on the body of John W. Arlington, deceased, held at Marengo, Ill., on the 18th day of May, 1921 and concluded on the 27th day of May 1921, we the undersigned jurors, sworn to inquire into the death of John W. Arlington, on oath to find that he came to his death by concussion of the brain when thrown from an automobile in which he was riding, the same being driven by, and owned by, Oscar Sandman, and while driving upon the public highway on the Marengo and Coral road about three miles southeast of Marengo, and at about 6:30 o'clock on Wednesday evening, May 18, 1921.

"Further, the jury believes from the evidence that the driver, Oscar Sandman, was under the influence of liquor when the accident occurred and that he was driving in a reckless manner.

"Further the jury believes from the evidence that the liquor was procured at the saloon of Henry Mathies at Dundee, Ill., on said May 18, 1921.

TRY AND DO IT!

Simple Enough After You Have Read The Following

This is how a man figures out the complex relationship of his own much mixed-up family.

He is Edmond Thomas, of Saitillo, Ohio, and says:

"I met a young widow with a grown up step-daughter and I married the widow.

"Then my father met our step-daughter and married her. That made my wife the mother-in-law of her father-in-law and my step-daughter my step mother, and my father became my step-son. See?"

"Then my step-mother, the step-daughter of my wife, had a son. That boy was of course, my brother, because he was my father's son, but he was also the son of my wife's step-daughter, and therefore her grandson. That made me grandfather of my step-brother. Then my wife had a son.

"My mother-in-law, the step-sister of my son, is also his grandmother, because he is her stepson's child. My father is the brother-in-law of my child because his step-sister is his wife. I am the brother of my own son, who is also the child of my grandmother. I am my grandmother's brother-in-law, my wife is her own child's aunt, my son is my father's nephew, and I am my own grandfather.

CENTRAL TAKES LEAD

Railroad Lays in Thousands of Tons of Coal as Precaution

The Illinois Central Railway Company has taken up the task of explaining to the people why they should buy their winter's supply of coal now, and to prove that it is believing in its own predictions has laid hundreds of thousands of tons of coal away in anticipation of the winter's shortage.

The fact is pointed out that mines are not running to capacity and no surplus is being mined. In the mean time the railroads of the country have thousands of idle coal cars on their tracks. This condition of affairs can only spell disaster in the future.

When the first cold snap arrives there will be a grand rush to the coal dealers. Most of them have a supply of coal in the yards, but not enough to supply their customers more than a few weeks. It is then that the mines will be run to capacity and every available car brought in to use, but there will not be sufficient production nor cars to take care of the situation.

Consumers have been more backward this year in placing orders than ever before. This is no doubt due to the fact that money is not plentiful. There are always some who must buy as their needs require owing to financial reasons. This fact simply emphasizes the point that those who can afford to do so should fill their bins now.

To use the language of one of The Republican's advertisers, "Do it now!"

COFFIN OF ATTILA

Burial Place of the Great Hun Leader Reported Found.

Tradition as to Final Resting Place of "Scourge of God" Seems to Have Been True.

A correspondent of the London Times reports the discovery in southern Hungary of what archeologists declare is the coffin of Attila the Hun, known to the Christian nations of the Fifth century as "the Scourge of God." The find was made in the bed of the Aranka river, a small tributary of the Theiss between the towns of Szegedin and Temesvar.

This discovery seems to support the persistent tradition regarding the great Hun leader's burial which has lived for almost 1,500 years. His death occurred soon after his invasion of Italy and on the night of his marriage. His body was carried across southern Austria at the head of his army and in Hungary, at a spot which was known only to a few of his chief officers, the corpse was inclosed in three coffins, the first of gold, the second of silver, and the third of iron, and buried. The captives who were assigned to the task of burying the body were strangled in order that the place of the interment might be kept a secret from Attila's foes.

For centuries there has been a great fascination in the search for relics of the Huns, for it was thought that they might throw some light upon these strange, almost unknown Asiatic invaders of Europe. The country along the Aranka river and around Szegedin has been industriously searched for evidence of their successes in Europe.

Some rare and beautiful gold vessels have been unearthed in this region. These relics are preserved among the Hapsburg treasures. While these have been identified as belonging to some of the peoples of the early migration from the East they have not been proved definitely to have belonged to the Huns. The latest find is thus especially noteworthy; not only is it the most valuable, but at the same time it is the most sought after of all the Hun treasures.

The memory of Attila and his bands of savage barbarians was revived during the World war. The devastation they wrought in the lands over which they swept seemed to furnish the only apt comparison for the desolation left by the modern invader. The people of central and southeastern Europe would question today if the ravages of their country by the Fifth century Huns left their trail as much suffering and sorrow as were left by the World war.

With the cessation of its rumble, came noise of rushing water. Mischance had led her to a spot where the road had been half washed out by the overflow from a mountain stream. The headlights showed an unrelieved stretch of mire which forbade the thought of trying to go on. The only thing to do was to back out—if she could—and, since it would be impossible to turn on the narrow trail, keep on backing till she regained the last fork; on the face of it no easy task, but feasible with care and patience.

Hopefully she restarted the engine and threw the reverse gears. The wheels moved with a sucking noise, at first sluggishly, then worked free and spun briskly. The car held fast where it had stopped. She shut off the ignition and got down to investigate, stepping into mud above her ankles. The sole result of her attempt to back out had been to bog down the wheels nearly to the hubs.

When she had strained the motor for a few more minutes without encouragement, she gave up the hopeless struggle and cried a little into her muddled hands.

The unhappy alternative was hers, to remain in the car till she was found—if she ever was—or to pick her way back through the pitch-dark forest to the first fork in the road, either to wait there to be recaptured by Mario, or else to push on into the valley, or wherever the road might lead, till she came to human habitation.

Either course was dismaying in anticipation. The forest frightened her indescribably. To stop where she was meant perhaps hours of waiting—daylight was still a long time off—in the solitude and silence of the woods, encompassed by she dared not guess what perils from prowling beasts of prey.

And on this reflection, she switched the headlights off, lest their shine attract attention. She recalled with painful vividness the fear of the forest that had haunted Leonora on the morning of the day of her death.

Of a sudden, in blind, witless panic, she tumbled out of the car and plowed back through the mire to the trail, only to become still more blindly a prey to imaginary terrors when she felt firm ground underfoot, and to blunder insanely on, clawed at by savage, withered hands, tripped and buffeted by malicious limbs, hounded by horrors of the imagination unspeakable.

Within two minutes she was off the trail, thrashing wildly through the undergrowth that choked the woods, hopelessly lost.

V. VALEDICTION.

It was less a woman than an animated scarecrow that broke from a dense thicket and stumbled into the mountain trail in the hot blast of mid morning.

Her cloak was gone and her slippers as well; bare and bleeding feet and ankles showed through the remnants of what had been silk stockings. Her frock, dripping water from every fold, thanks to a recent misadventure with a brook, was an affair of shreds and tatters caked with splashes of mud and stained with green slime; one sleeve was missing entirely. The bare white arm had been cruelly scratched by thorns. The hair falling round her shoulders was a net of tangles and knots in which leaves and twigs had become entwined. Her face was disfigured with smears of mud in which tears had washed pale channels. Her eyes were red and swollen, her lips puffed, her look was stupid to the point of witlessness.

She panted and at times moaned feebly as she walked—if she could be said to walk, whose progress was a zig-zag thing of yaws and veers like that of a yacht under full sail in a stiff breeze with no hand at the helm. In a shallow clearing of one side of the trail stood a small shanty of the crudest kind, a crazy structure of undressed logs and rough planks weather-beaten to the shade of slaty gray. It had a door, however, and the door was closed. The girl opened it simply by falling against it. It banged against the wall and swung back into place after admitting her. The room inside—there was but one—showed evidence of more or less recent occupation; a half-loaf of stale bread on the table, some open tins holding samples of food from which an unpleasant odor exhaled, several empty whisky bottles and one half full, empty cigarette cartons and a vast litter of cigarette stumps. A frying pan on the sheet-iron stove held a rasher of bacon in a pool of coagulated grease. There were tumbled blankets on a rickety cot in the corner.

The girl saw none of these things; or if she saw them, they meant nothing to her. As if her strength had only sufficed to sustain her to the shelter of a roof, she dropped to the floor and lay there, panting and sobbing and quaking like a child that has been brutally punished.

Within three minutes a man came running up the trail. He was young, slender and wiry of stature, and wore an aged red sweater with a pair of khaki trousers. His face was of a glowing scarlet shade and dripped with sweat which ran down into his eyes and was at least in part the cause of the monologue of profanity which clogged his labored breathing. He lumbered on wearily, like one who has run a long distance, ever and anon looking back over shoulder as if he feared pursuit. His right hand held an automatic pistol of heavy caliber, ready for instant use.

At the door of the shanty he paused, shut his lips tight to still the noise of his own breathing, and listened with head bent to one side. Apparently he heard nothing. A look of fear that had clouded his eyes passed, and he grinned an evil, snarling grin as he kicked open the door and went in.

The girl had fallen on the far side of the table, where she was not immediately visible. Unsuspecting of her presence, the man closed the door and lurched to the one unglazed window, where he stopped to spy out anxiously, peering down the trail he had just traveled and listening intently.

But the girl had been roused by his entrance, and first pushing her shoulders up from the floor with her arms, presently laid hold of the edge of the table and pulled herself into a standing position. The table rocked slightly and scraped the floor. A whisky bottle fell on its side.

The man turned like a hunted animal, snarling, saw the woman standing there, in her torn frock, water dripping from her hair and clothing, and screamed with terror like a trapped wolf.

His arm flew up and his pistol spat five shots in less than as many seconds. He fired point blank, at a distance of not more than five feet. Yet when the fifth shot had been fired the girl was still standing unharmed, staring blankly at him.

Then he went utterly insane with fear. One word—"Leonora!"—was his shrieked valediction to the world. His pistol held a sixth cartridge. He thrust the muzzle between his teeth and pulled the trigger.

As Carnahan fell, Fosdick with the detective Andrews and the man Mario broke into the shanty.

CHAPTER ELEVEN

WHEN IT CAME TRUE.

The day was very still, so still that Priscilla could hear no sound but the unending mutter of surf breaking on the Southampton shore.

She lay on a chaise-longue, indolently watching the sea, just as she had watched it daily from her window, for hours on end, through weeks that ran into months without her heed. Upon her lap rested an open book, upon the book a hand as white as the fair margins of its pages. But it was not more colorless than her face. In her look there was a hint of resignation, of patient weariness.

She had been a long time ill, with an illness which Aunt Esther persisted in calling brain fever, though Dr. Philip Fosdick had for it a name less picturesque.

And for a longer time she had been in a state that was by courtesy termed convalescence; though if she were making any real progress toward complete recovery it was imperceptible to solicitous eyes. On the other hand, there were no signs of retrogression. She remained, in short, quite simply in suspense, as one might hold life not worth the trouble either of living or of relinquishing. The vitality of her body could not yield; neither could it prevail against the inertia of her spirit. She existed—nothing more. Fosdick knew this lassitude could not endure forever; the day must dawn that would see her cure complete. Meanwhile he was assiduous in his attention, unfailing in sympathetic understanding and so frequently a guest of the villa that seldom two days passed without seeing his car at its door.

Today he was tapping at her door before Priscilla knew he was in the house. She recognized his knock and had a wan smile of welcome ready for him. Nothing in his manner suggested that the visit was to prove extraordinary as he sat down beside the chaise-longue, his finger tips upon her pulse, and amiably recited the ritual of inquiries concerning her condition.

"A little weary, Philip," she told him in answer to one stereotyped question. "I began to wonder if ever I do recover from some things."

"Such as—?" he smiled. "Things you've forbidden me to talk about."

Fosdick looked thoughtful. "I don't know," he said in a speculative tone. "Perhaps I've been wrong about that; or perhaps the time has come when we may talk. In fact, I rather think it has—if you feel strong enough."

"Meaning, I presume," she said with a quiet smile, "you've something to tell me."

"Meaning," he laughed, "just that. It was no good our talking till I had. But now . . ." He drew from a pocket a handful of old letters; "The solution of the mystery," he announced—"at last!"

"Don't tease me, Philip," "I won't, but first I must explain. Has it ever occurred to you to wonder how Andrews and I happened to be with Mario that morning when we found you in the cabin with Carnahan?"

"I've wondered—yes—wondered whether it was true or not. All that time seems so unreal as I recall it. I've wondered often if perhaps it were nothing but another kind of dream, something I thought I lived through while I was actually in bed, delirious."

"No; it was all true enough. But let me tell you . . ." The afternoon you disappeared I had spent out of town, trying to interview an inmate of a home for the aged, up near Pawling—an old, old woman, registered on the records of the institution as Mrs. Leonora O'More."

"The same. On the clue you gave me of that name Andrews traced her to the home. She refused to talk to him. She refused to talk to me. I tried bribery, but money wouldn't tempt her. She had enough for her small needs, and took a malicious pleasure, I fancy, in watching me struggle with my temper when she wouldn't talk. However, her very tactfulness told me she must have something to tell, and I hoped that you, posing to her as Leonora on the strength of the resemblance, might worm the secret out of her. At all events, we were on the right trail. So I hurried back to town—and found you missing. Mrs. Trowbridge in hysterics, the lock broken on the studio door, the devil to pay all round . . ."

"Meanwhile Andrews had run up to Kingston to hunt for Mario—on the strength of your dream in which you heard him tell Leonora he must hurry to catch his train there. When I got home, between three and four in the morning, after a night of fruitless searching for you, I found a long distance call from Kingston waiting for me. Andrews reported that he had located the cump which Mario had rented for his honeymoon. On the off-chance that he might have been concerned in your disappearance—I couldn't rest, of course, and it was something to do—I jumped into my car and arrived at Kingston about nine o'clock in the morning. Andrews had a road map, with the location of the bungalow clearly marked. We struck immediately back through the hills.

"About five miles from our destination we met Mario afoot. You know what he had to tell us. While we were talking—it took some time to make him understand you weren't Leonora and that we had any right to but in—Carnahan boiled up the road in a high-powered roadster, making about forty miles an hour on a stiff grade—didn't see us, because we'd stopped just around a bend in the road, until he was almost on top of us. He got his brakes on in time to stop just short of my car, which of course was blocking the road. Andrews and Mario recognized him instantly, and he knew Mario. After as interesting a three-cornered pistol fight as I ever care to see again in the role of innocent bystander, Carnahan took cover in the woods. We pursued.

"Unquestionably Carnahan took you for the ghost of Leonora, and was convinced when he failed to hit you once in five shots at close range."

"Yes," Priscilla said, "the last thing before he killed himself he shrieked her name."

"Well," Fosdick resumed, "you were a physical and mental wreck. I had to wait till you were strong enough to confront Mother O'More and cheat the truth out of her. Before you were out of bed she had a paralytic stroke that put her vocal cords out of commission. She couldn't have talked if she'd wanted to. I did everything that could be done for her, and she clung to life with amazing tenacity in one so aged; but the second stroke came yesterday, and finished her. I had made the manager of the home a personal friend. He telephoned at once, and I ran out to Pawling this morning. Among the old woman's few effects we found these letters."

Fosdick didn't offer to give them to Priscilla. "I'd rather you didn't read them yet," he said. "They're rather affecting letters; I'm afraid they'd upset you. Later, when you're quite strong, some time. . . ."

"They were written by your father to your mother. She was Mother O'More's niece. She met your father through posing for him. Their marriage was an affair of sudden impulse. They loved each other devotedly, but they were never, after the first few months, happy. Your mother had a strongly independent spirit. She was out of place in the society of your father's friends, knew it, saw how she handicapped him, and resented it bitterly. She refused absolutely to try to mold herself to his ways of life. They quarreled hideously, I fancy. She wanted to leave him, and he wouldn't listen to it. Remember; they were desperately in love."

"Eventually they left New York on a forlorn hope, planning to establish themselves in some part of the country where they were not known and try to build up a life together. That was a foreordained failure. Your father was miserable away from his home and his friends. At last your mother took her fate in her hands and ran away. She took with her Leonora, leaving you to your father."

"Leonora was my sister." "You were born twins in California, several months before your mother ran away. . . . Your father used every possible means to try to find your mother and induce her to return to him, but she eluded him till the end; she died, it would seem, a year or so later, leaving Leonora in the care of her aunt—Mother O'More. These letters were addressed to your mother in her care. It would appear they were never answered."

But Priscilla was no longer listening; and perceiving this, Fosdick paused.

"My sister?" the girl exclaimed after many minutes of thought—"Leonora!" "That is the explanation of the mystery," Fosdick affirmed. "That a strong psychic affinity exists between twins has long been a scientifically accepted fact. The records of psychic research contain many instances of telepathic and telesthetic communication between twins. No record exists of a case so extraordinary as yours, to my knowledge; still, that is the true explanation."

"But Leonora . . . Did she know about me? I mean, did she dream of me as I dreamed of her? I wonder . . ."

"She did, to some extent at least. She told Mario about it. Of course she knew she had a sister. But she had glimpses of your life in her dreams, now and then, and envied you and resented your happier fortunes. So Mario says."

"Mario? Then you have seen him—?" "Today," Fosdick said, smiling. "In fact, I took him with me to Pawling. We've grown to be good friends this summer. He's an extraordinarily fine fellow. He wants to see you if you think you're strong enough for the interview today."

Priscilla got up suddenly. "Where is he?" "Downstairs, waiting in the library—alone."

The girl took two impulsive steps toward the door, turned back with a radiant face, and flung out her hand to Fosdick.

"Oh, Philip, Philip!" she cried, tears of happiness in her eyes, contrition quivering in her voice. He bowed above her hands, pressing them to his lips.

"There, dear girl!" he said, releasing them. "It's happiness enough for me to think . . . But you're keeping Mario waiting. Do go!" Fosdick stood with a bended head, watching her cross the threshold to that world where dreams come true.

FELT LIKE AN IRON BAND AROUND HEAD

Mrs. Osborne Says She Shudders When She Thinks How She Suffered.

"For years," said Mrs. V. B. Osborne, of 718 Lancaster Ave., Lexington, Ky., "I have been in a run-down condition; nervous, weak and dizzy. I was actually so nervous that any sudden noise or excitement would produce a palpitation of my heart that frightened me. I absolutely could not climb stairs, for to attempt such would thoroughly exhaust me."

"I had nervous headaches and when they came on it seemed that an iron band was drawn tight around my head. I now shudder when I think of those headaches. My stomach was weak and I could not digest the lightest liquid food. Any food of a solid nature caused nausea and the sickening sensation remained for hours."

"My misery was almost unbearable. My sleep was never sound and I was worn out all the time. My condition was indeed a very deplorable one. I finally sought treatment in Cincinnati, but nothing helped me one particle. I was on the verge of giving up in despair when a neighbor pleaded with me to try Tanlac. I obtained a bottle of the medicine and began its use."

"I began improving at once and soon felt my nervousness and dizziness disappearing. Then my headaches left me and I realized my strength had returned. My appetite and digestion improved and I am now so much better in every way. This Tanlac is a wonderful medicine and the only one that ever really helped me. I hope every poor woman who is suffering as I did will try it."

Tanlac is sold by leading druggists everywhere.—Adv.

Intelligent.

You may not believe it, but we have this on creditable authority:

A marine reported the loss of his gun. "Was there any mark on it," asked the corporal, "by which you might recognize it?"

"No, I think not," answered the marine.

"Sure?"

"Well, come to think of it, there was a name on it?"

"What?"

WAS FAMILIAR WITH CHROMO

Mrs. Newly Rich Somewhat Too Anxious to Air Her Knowledge, and Her Ignorance.

Harvey Maitland Watts, a Philadelphia art critic, said at a dinner in Rittenhouse square:

"The ignorance of the new rich in art matters is quite incredible. The wife of a new rich profiteer was buying pictures in a Walnut street shop the other day. After she had bought a number of costly pictures she said: 'Now show me something a little cheaper for the back hall. It's dark there.'"

"The salesman brought out another picture. 'This, madam,' he said, 'is only a chromo, and we could let you have it for nearly nothing.'"

"The new rich lady nodded in a sage way. 'Yes, of course,' she said, 'Chromo is a struggling and obscure artist, and he can't expect to command good prices till he makes a popular hit, can he?'"

To Be Washed. "What do you think of the elephant, Bud?" "Glad I haven't got ears like that."

FOUND SILENCE ONLY REFUGE Under the Circumstances, it Would Seem, Mrs. Paula's Friend Had Made Wise Decision.

Now, everybody in town knows that Mrs. Paula Platt was talking of making a visit to her married daughter in Ohio. She had been talking about it for two years, but age and the natural timidity of a woman long a widow had postponed the great event from month to month, until the neighbors began to wonder whether it would ever come to pass.

So one morning when Uncle Tom's Filleters met a friend of Mrs. Paula's, there was a twinkle in his eyes as he asked: "When is Mrs. Paula going out to Ohio?"

"Don't ask me," said the other. "I don't know nothin' about it. If I left her to go, she says we all want to get rid of her; and if I tell her to stay at home, she says I am mean. I ain't sayin' a word!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Proud of Her Daddy. Helen was playing out in front of her house Flag day and evidently had noticed the flags that were out in many of the homes. This same day happened to be her dad's birthday but she was not aware of it until she had been let in on the big secret of a surprise that was in store for her dad when he came home for the evening meal and that she was not to tell any one about it.

When given this information she exclaimed, "Is today daddy's birthday?"

When told that it was, she remarked quite decidedly, her big eyes getting larger, "Oh now I know why all the flags are out."

The one great drawback about matrimony is the unsatisfactory compensation.

NEW PIERS AT TRESTLE

A gang of men is at work this week driving piles under the Illinois Central west of Genoa, as a foundation for new concrete piers which will soon be constructed. The old abutments and piers, built many years ago, are inadequate to support safely the heavy trains which now cross over the trestle. For this reason all trains have been slowed down recently when crossing. A new idea in construction will be carried out in the new piers. Instead of a solid mass of concrete, the center will be hollow.

I. W. Douglass was in Elgin, Tuesday.

COAL FACTS

1921

Wise consumers, particularly domestic users, will begin now to lay in their next winter's coal supply.

We find that all classes of consumers are holding off.

This is a big mistake.

The production of coal is, as a consequence, very low—just enough to meet immediate needs.

YET:

There are plenty of cars for getting the coal to you.

Weather conditions are favorable.

Prices, we believe, are as low as they will be this year.

We are in this country just now passing through the last stages of post-war conditions.

It is absolutely necessary to keep on even keel—to STABILIZE.

They never made a cigarette like this in my day—

The Camel idea wasn't born then. It was the exclusive expert Camel blend that revolutionized cigarette smoking.

That Camel blend of choice Turkish and Domestic tobaccos hits just the right spot. It gives Camels such mellow mildness and fragrance!

The first time I smoked Camels I knew they were made for me. I knew they were the smoothest, finest cigarette in the world, at any price.

Nobody can tell me anything different.
